Of the seven essays contained in this volume the first has been translated specially for this edition by Miss Ella Noyes, the last appeared originally in the Fortnightly Review, June 1870, from the pen of Miss L. Martineau, the remaining five are reprinted from "Essays by Joseph Mazzini, most of them translated for the first time by Thomas Okey. Edited with an Introduction by Bolton King," London, 1894.

INTRODUCTION

I

JOSEPH MAZZINI died on March 10, 1872. Two days later the Times recorded the event in these words "We have to announce to-day the death of a man who in his time has played a most singular part upon the theatre of European politics; one whose name has for years been regarded as a symbol of Revolution, or rather Republicanism; one in whose personal character there were many fine and noble qualities: but still a man who was feared even more widely than he was loved, and one whose departure from the scene of action, to say the least, will be no unwelcome news to several crowned and discrowned members of the family of European sovereigns. He was the man who ever 'troubled Israel' by his ceaseless efforts in the cause of Republicanism. and now at length he is at rest. He died on Sunday at Pisa." A selection from the writings of this terror of principalities and powers is reprinted in this little book. The most timid and law-abiding citizen need not fear to turn over its pages. Two years ago the Italian people celebrated the centenary of Mazzini's birth. The King and his Ministers went in state to hear him eulogised; commemorations were held in the government schools by order of the Minister of Instruction; and the flags of Italy and England were wrapped around his monument.

Mazzini's name is not now as familiar to English ears as it was in the mid-Victorian period. Other days, other heroes. A Scottish university professor used sometimes to take a census of the students who had read Sartor as a rough test of Carlyle's place in the reading of young

Scotsmen. The results showed that Carlyle was following the bag of meal and becoming a traditional diet. A teacher who should number the students of our universities who had read the Duties of Man would meet with a more intelligible but not less complete ignorance of an inspiring book, and with a knowledge of its author which never went beyond coupling him with Garibaldi. Their fathers, who were boys in the fifties and sixties, probably marched through the village street shouting:

I wish I had a penny!
What for? What for?
To buy a rope, to hang the Pope
Instead of Garibaldi.

Boys are readier to chant the exploits of a soldier in a red shirt than the ideas of a prophet in a black coat, and the people are mostly boys. But that Mazzini's name will live on among those of Italy's greatest citizens and the world's hest men, seems now beyond dispute. He has never enjoyed the ready applause accorded to the successfulsoldier, nor the sometimes sinister fame achieved by the successful statesman. Just as in the days of his flesh he passed along the by-ways of Europe, an exile from every land but our own, ever conspiring and ever eluding the authorities, so his subsequent influence has been fugitive. secret, noiseless, but none the less real, deep, persistent, His best compositions have had little vogue, but they are treasured by the musicians who know. Out of print, and inguessed at by the multitude, their teaching has inspired some of the most unselfish activities of our time, -- the devotion of some settlement worker or East-End doctor, of some incorruptible councillor or ardent co-operator, of some labour leader or nationalist. But Mazzini's most precious bequest to the world was not a bundle of essays, but a noble life. Like Socrates he lived his philosophy, but in circumstances much more intricate and baffling than those which heset the Athenian. The story of those circumstances is part of the general history of Europe in the nineteenth century. In so far as Mazzini shared in them they have been narrated for English readers most fully and judicially by Mr. Bolton King. A sympathetic memoir was written by Madame Venturi, and there are the admirable Essays of F. W. H. Myers and William Clarke. The story of the Roman Republic has been well told by Mr. R. M. Johnston. Mazzini's own autobiographical notes are included in the collected edition of his writings. These sources, and Mazzini's own words wherever possible, have been freely used in the short sketch which follows.

In the eighteenth century princes ruled over tracts of land rather than nations. The distinction was clearly seen when the French Revolution threw the people to one side and the government to the other. It is a commonplace to say that Napoleon builded better than he knew, and that instead of making France supreme in Europe he roused the slumbering spirit of nationality everywhere. Himself an Italian, pride of race united with the desire to overthrow the Austrian dominion in Italy, and led him deliberately to encourage national aspirations there. In 1800 he defeated the Austrians at Marengo, and proceeded to divide the Italian spoils among his relatives and generals. Their rule had all the unlovely features of the time—secret police, press censorship, nepotism, intrigue, plunder. Local . prejudices were outraged; tens of thousands of Italians fell fighting in Spain and Russia under a foreign flag. On the other hand, the Napoleonic régime crippled feudalism, strengthened the central authority, established schools, braced the soldiery, and generally quickened the energies of the people. Napoleon fell. Scheming diplomats at Vienna parcelled out the Italian peninsula afresh between scheming kings and clerics. Austria and Piedmont became the predominant partners. The republics of

¹ To this list must now be added the important work of Mr. G. M Trevelyan: Garibaldi's Defence of the Roman Republic. ² London: Smith, Elder.

Venice and Genoa were doomed. The people, always dreading absorption by France, welcomed back the old rulers, good and bad alike. With them came the anachronisms of the old order, "the legal abuses, the feudal privileges, monasteries, ecclesiastical courts, the disabilities of Jews and Protestants." Reaction against the disturbing ideas of the Revolution led to distrust of education and the suppression of opinion. An epidemic of criticism was endangering eternal salvation. "The Liberals are sinners," declared the Duke of Modena: "pray for their repentance, but punish the unrepentant."

Meanwhile a young Genoese was pondering over forbidden French newspapers which his father kept hidden behind his innocent medical books. This inquisitive youth was Joseph Mazzini, born on June 22, 1805. Visitors to the City of Palaces will recall the house in the Via Lomellini: the Greek and Italian legends; the faded wreaths from some loval republican club; the soiled and shabby copies of Guicciardini's History, Robertson's Charles V., Emerson's English Traits; the courteous attendant who presents the stranger with a copy of the Duties of Man. The father was a professor of anatomy at the university, the mother a woman of strong intellect and deep affection. Both were alive to the mighty movements going on around them, and their son heard daily the republican talk of parents "whose bearing towards high or low was ever the same." He was a delicate child, and apparently never went to school. While a worthy old priest taught him the Latin declensions, the pupil was / learning to revere the republics of Greece and Rome. At fourteen he matriculated at the University. He chafed t at "chapels" and the innumerable formalities expected from the students. His gentle nature and acute mind won him an easy ascendency over his companions. "Simple and economical in his own habits," wrote one of them, "he always found means generously to assist the wants of those around him; indeed he carried this disposition to excess; for not content with giving away his books and money, he constantly bestowed even his clothes upon the needy among his fellow-students." It was intended that he should follow his father's profession, but he sickened at the dissecting-room and turned to law. His real mistress, however, was literature—"a thousand visions of historical dramas and romances floated before my mental eye"—and he wou'd have served her with fine devotion had not a more imperious rival claimed his loyalty.

The wind bloweth where it listeth. The call to Mazzini came on a Sunday in April 1821, when he and his mother and a friend of the family were walking in the streets of Genoa. They were suddenly accosted by "a tall, blackbearded man, with a severe and energetic countenance, and a fiery glance that I have never since forgotten. He held out a white handkerchief toward us, merely saying, 'For the refugees of Italy.' My mother and friend dropped some money into the handkerchief, and he turned from us to put the same request to others." The man was one of a crowd of revolutionists who had flocked to Genoa after a fruitless insurrection against Austria. The incident made a deep impression on the boy of sixteen. His spirit was crushed by the impossibility he felt of ever conceiving by what means to free his country from the foreign voke. "In the midst of the noisy, tumultuous life of the scholars around me, I was sombre and absorbed, and appeared like one suddenly grown old. I childishly determined to dress always in black, fancying myself in mourning for my country." It was not easy to give up literature for politics. He read what books in Italian, French, and English he could lay hands on at a time when "half the masterpieces of contemporary European literature came under the censor's ban." He steeped his mind in the Bible and Dante Shakespeare and Byron, Goethe and Schiller. Byron's passion for history, his hatred of the doctrines of the Holy Alliance. his sympathy with heroic endeavour, his exposure of the sterility of egoism, explain the high place which Mazzini always gave him among the world's poets. But it was from the pages of Dante that he drew the richest nourishxii

Across five centuries of glory and shame, libert and servitude, deep called unto deep in the spirits of the two men. The thought that seethed within the soul of the great Florentine was now stirring afresh in the boson of the young Genoese—the yearning for unity, moral an political, founded upon some great organic authoritative idea, the love of country, the worship of Rome, the sublimitivision of the destiny in store for her, leading the human race in holiness and truth. The pedantic critics an syllable-splitters were all astray. One had made Dant Guelph; another Ghibelline; nearly all proved him a orthodox Catholic. He was none of these, cried Mazzini he was a Christian and an Italian.

But it was no time for variant readings. The critic mus give way to the apostle. He found a pulpit in a commercia paper published at Genoa, then in another at Leghorn Both were suppressed. Three articles were written for th chief Italian review, the Antologia. But this was not enoug for his ardent spirit. He joined the secret society of th Carbonari. It had once been the rallying-ground of enthus astic Liberals who aimed in a vague way at independence , but it was now a declining force, and a number of unsuccess ful risings had brought discredit upon it. It offered a wa of usefulness, however; but Mazzini chafed under its fantasti ritual, its negative programme, its patriotism that looked t France for deliverance. He was already dreaming of very different society. But despotic governments dislik dreamers. Mazzini was arrested, ostensibly on the charge of introducing a recruit into the ranks of the Carbonar really, as the Governor of Genoa told his father, because h was a thoughtful young man of talent, fond of solitary walk by night. "We don't like young people thinking withou our knowing the subject of their thoughts." From his cell in the fortress of Savona he looked out upon "the sea and sky-two symbols of the infinite and, except the Alps, th sublimest things in nature." Here, with a Bible, a Tacitu; a Byron, and a friendly greenfinch for companions, he has leisure to elaborate the plan of "Young Italy."

The ideas of Italian unity and independence were not In the distant past there had been born with Mazzini. Dante and Rienzi. In the immediate past there had been the French Revolution, Napoleon, Romanticism-all active in the years surrounding Mazzini's birth. Romanticism has been called the starting-point of the modern political schools in Italy, the precursor alike of Young Italy and the Moderates. It was more than a mere literary revolt: it was a propaganda of political ideas for which some of its apostles suffered the horrors of the Spielberg. Songs, plays, pamphlets, novels, were the vehicles of the new movement. Editions of Dante appeared literally by the dozen. In 1820 the Antologia was founded in order "to make Italy know itself." Seven years later Manzoni published his famous novel, in which the discerning could read the meaning as clearly as we now read it in Kathleen ni Houlihan. Wherein did Mazzini differ from these distinguished predecessors and contemporaries? He set their ideas on fire. Where they were literary he was political; where they were critical he was constructive: where they were merely moral he was passionately religious.

He came out of prison with a programme, the magnificent daring of which can only be realised by those who know the Italy of the time—morselled out into a mosaic of states, divided by differences of speech and temper, honeycombed with secret associations and spies; an aristocracy fawning on the foreign conqueror; a common people "eating Austria with their bread," and drugged by opera, carnival, and charity; a Church respected in proportion as one travelled away from the centre of her influence to the circumference. Out of the midst of this degradation, in it but not of it, Mazzini, young and poor, lifted up his voice: "I see the people pass before my eyes in the livery of wretchedness and political subjection, ragged and hungry, sainfully gathering the crumbs that wealth tosses insultingly to it, or lost and wandering in riot and the intoxication of a brutish, angry, savage joy; and I remember that those brutalised faces bear the finger-print of God, the mark of the same mission as our own. I lift myself to the vision of the future, and behold the people rising in its majesty, brothers in one faith, one bond of equality and love, one ideal of citizen virtue that ever grows in beauty and might; the people of the future, unspoilt by luxury, ungoaded by wretchedness, awed by the consciousness of its rights and duties." He bade his countrymen unite and drive the Austrian out, heedless of help from France. "No nation deserves freedom or can long retain it which does not win it for itself. Revolutions must be made by the people and for the people." It was useless waiting for opportunitiesthey must be made. But it was to be war, not only on the Austrian, but on Italian ignorance, dissension, and vicethe wretched brood of oppression. Servile habits and unworthy affections must go. The nation must purify herself in order to fulfil her mission. The sole path to victory was through sacrifice-constancy in sacrifice. In the name of God and the people, he invited Italians to march through poverty, exile, and death to a free country. The second of these alternatives was to fall to his lot immediately. Released from Savona, he was offered "internment in a small town, or exile." He chose the latter, and in February 1831 said his good-byes to his family, crossed the Alps to Geneva, went thence to Lyons and Marseilles. Here, in a small room, with a handful of patriots recruited from the refugees in the town, he unfolded his plans for transforming Italy into a free, independent, republican nation. Unity was to be sought for by armed insurrection; social reform by political action and education. The aims of Young Italy were to be public; its methods, perforce, secret. To work in the open would be to march straight to the Spielberg or the scaffold. "I never saw," wrote Mazzini in after years, "any nucleus of young men so devoted, capable of such strong mutual affection, such pure enthusiasm, and such readiness in daily, hourly toil, as were those who then laboured with me. We had no office, no helpers. All day, and a great part of the night, we were buried in our work, writing articles and letters, getting information from travellers, enlisting seamen, folding papers. fastening envelopes, dividing our time between literary and manual work. . . . We lived as equals and brothers: we had but one thought, one hope, one ideal to reverence. The foreign republicans loved and admired us for our tenacity and unflagging industry; we were often in real want, but we were light-hearted in a way, and smiling because we believed in the future." The young leader united to an indomitable spirit a striking presence. His English biographer quotes a description of him as he appeared at this time: "His long, curling black hair, which fell upon his shoulders, the extreme freshness of his clear olive complexion, the chiselled delicacy of his regular and beautiful features, aided by his very youthful look and sweetness and openness of expression, would have made his appearance almost too feminine, if it had not been for his noble forehead, the power of firmness and decision that was mingled with their gaiety and sweetness in the bright flashes of his dark eves and in the varying expression of his mouth, together with his small and beautiful moustachios and beard. Altogether he was at that time the most beautiful being. male or female, that I had ever seen, and I have not since seen his equal." Thirty years later Jowett told a correspondent, "Some friends of mine, who know him (Mazzini), assure me that he has the greatest fascination of manner they have ever met with."

The young band worked with an enthusiasm which stirred a quick response at home. Articles, manifestoes, pamphlets poured from their leader's fervid pen, were printed and smuggled into Italy in barrels of pitch and bales of drapery, and thrilled their readers with their elevated thought and glowing prose. "Climb the hills," he bade them, "sit at the farmer's table, visit the workshops and the artisans, whom you now neglect. Tell them of their rightful liberties, their ancient traditions and glories, the old commercial greatness which has gone; talk to them of the thousand forms of oppression, which they are ignorant of, because no one points them out." Lodges sprang up in the chief towns of the north and centre, thousands of recruits were enrolled, and by 1833 the Austrian Government considered "Young Italy" sufficiently dangerous to declare membership thereof high treason punishable by death.

For centuries Piedmont had been a buffer state, struck now by France, now by Austria. In such a position it was natural that the arts of diplomacy and war should absorb the main energies of the little kingdom. It was natural, too that patriots of all parties should look to Piedmont to lead in the struggle against Austria. Mazzini now appealed to its king to head the national movement. The character of Charles Albert offers interesting parallels to that of another potentate who in our own day has had to confront revolution. He was pathetically regarded as the leader of causes he "Everybody," it was said, "expects a constitution from Charles Albert." In his youth he had dallied with the Carbonari, but his Liberalism was a spent sympathy. "The religious mood grew upon him; he became a devotee, easily played on by confessor and Jesuit, timidly scrupulous to prove himself a good son of the Church and gain Papal sanction for his acts." "He stood 'between the dagger of the Carbonari and the poisoned chocolate of the Jesuits'. . . 'a strange compound of the worldly and the martyr spirit, no hero, but a perplexed, scruple-harassed man, the victim of a fatal indecision between the authority of convention and the noble promptings of his heart." His reply to Mazzini's appeal was to order him to be seized should he cross the frontier. The exiles then planned a rising with Genoa and Alessandria as centres, hoping to force the King to lead or abdicate, but an accident revealed the plot and a savage persecution crushed the conspiracy. There are senses in which history repeats itself with very little differenceForged signatures, enervating drugs, physical torture were used to force the prisoners to betray their comrades. Dreading he might succumb, Jacopo Ruffini, Mazzini's dearest friend, committed suicide in his cell. Mazzini himself was condemned to death, and the French Government decreed his banishment; but he remained hidden in Marseilles for a year, pushing on the crusade. In the middle of July 1833 he went to Geneva to organise another insurrection, the leadership of which, contrary to his advice, was vested in an adventurer who exhausted the funds and delayed action until all chance of success was gone. The failure of the two expeditions and the strain of work, anxiety and secrecy which they involved, preyed on Mazzini's health and plunged him for a time into a black despair. The forms of his dead comrades rose up before him "like the phantoms of a crime and its unavailing remorse. I could not recall them to life. How many mothers I had caused to weep! How many more must learn to weep, should I persist in the attempt to arouse the youth of Italy to noble action, to awaken in them the yearning for a common country! And if that country were indeed an illusion!" Diplomatic notes poured down upon Switzerland, and Mazzini was banished from the Republic. Again he managed to elude the police, leading a hunted life, now sheltered by some Protestant pastor, now spending months in untenanted houses where in the moaning of the wind he heard Ruffini's voice calling to him. Gradually the tempest of doubt subsided "One morning I awoke to find my mind tranquil and my spirit calmed, as one who had passed through a great danger. . . . The first thought that passed across my spirit was, 'Your sufferings are the temptations of egoism, and arise from a misconception of life." He searched his heart to see if it had any wicked way in it. Was there any lurking selfishness? Material desires he had surrendered long ago, but he had clung to the affections. "I should have thought of them, as of a blessing from God, to be accepted with thankfulness, not as of something to be expected and exacted as a right and a reward. Instead of this, I had made them a condition of fulfilling my duties. I had not reached the ideal of love, love that has no hope in this life. I had worshipped not love but the joys of love." He bade a long farewell to individual hopes, dug the grave, not of his affections, but of all the desires and ineffable comforts of affection, so that none might ever know the Ego buried beneath. In like manner he traced to egotism the failure of the French Revolution and the various unsuccessful risings in Italy. Men had sought after happiness, clamoured for their rights. A higher note must be struck. "We fell as a political party, we must rise as a religious party." "Life is a mission; duty, therefore, its highest law. . . . Each of us is bound to purify his own soul as a temple : to free it from egotism; to set before himself, with a religious sense of the importance of the study, the problem of his own life; to search out what is the most striking, the most urgent need of the men by whom he is surrounded, then to interrogate his own faculties and capacity, and resolutely apply them to the satisfaction of that need. . . . Young brothers, when once you have conceived and determined your mission within your soul, let nought arrest your steps. Fulfil it with all your strength; fulfil it, whether blessed by love or visited by hate; whether strengthened by association with others, or in the sad solitude that almost always surrounds the martyrs of thought. The path is clear before you; you are cowards, unfaithful to your own future, if, in spite of sorrows and delusions, you do not pursue it to the end."

With Mazzini in Switzerland were Agostino and Giovanni Ruffini. They lacked the heroic quality of their dead brother, and felt acutely the strain of a conspirator's life. For their sakes, chiefly, Mazzini decided to come to London, and they arrived here in January 1837. Mazzini grew to love this "sunless and musicless island," but his first experience of a dingy lodging in a back street filled him with longing for the Alps which he had loved "almost as a mother." More trying still was the impatience of his comrades, who could not soar to Mazzini's transcendental heights. Where all are geniuses life may be tolerable for all, but the odds are against the happiness of the family in which the genius is set solitary. Nor did a diet of potatoes and rice, with their undoubted vegetarian virtues, conduce to the harmony of the household near the Euston Road. And the maid-of-all-work had never heard of the Gospel of Duty! Much may be endured where there is money to procure better, but the exiles were in the direct poverty. Mazzini was not the man to resist the importunities of his countrymen while he had a penny left, and some of them thought that "in the name of this chimera of human brotherhood" they had a right to make themselves at home in his house. Precious souvenirs, books, clothes, began to find their way to the pawnshops, and he dragged himself from one moneylender to another, paying a ruinous rate of interest. In the daytime he found his way into "the valley of the shadow of books "—the international workshop in Bloomsbury, and under its sheltering dome began to turn out an article or two. He got to know some English families, the Carlyles among the first. In 1840 he moved to Chelsea-then a suburb of hayfields and market gardens -to be near them, and they were very kind and helpful. Mrs. Carlyle had a deep affection for him, and took him into her confidence in her domestic troubles. He repaid her with a couple of letters which are surely the noblest ever penned in such a situation.

To JANE WELSH CARLYLE.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I was yesterday almost the whole day out, and did not receive your notes, except in the evening, when it was too late to answer them. Your few words sound sad, deeply, I will not say irreparably sad; and the worst of it is that none can help you but It is only you who can, by a calm, dispassionate, fair re-examination of the past, send back to nothingness the ghosts and phantoms that you have been conjuring up. It is only you who can teach yourself that, whatever the present may be, you must front it with dignity, with a clear perception of all your duties, with a due reverence to your immortal soul, with a religious faith in times yet to come, that are to dawn under the approach of other cloudless suns. I could only point out to you the fulfilment of duties which can make life-not happy-what can? but earnest, sacred and resignated; but I would make you frown or scorn. We have a different conception of life, and are condemned here down to walk on two parallels. Still it is the feeling of those duties that saves me from the atheism of despair, and leads me through a life every day more barren and burdensome, in a sort of calm, composed manner-such, I repeat, as the consciousness of something everlasting within us claims from every living mortal. For I now most coolly and deliberately do declare to you, that partly through what is known to you, partly through things that will never be known, I am carrying a burden even heavier than you, and have undergone even bitterer deceptions than you have. But by dint of repeating to myself that there is no happiness under the moon, that life is a self-sacrifice meant for some higher and happier thing; that to have a few loving beings, or, if none, to have a mother watching you from Italy or from Heaven, it is all the same, ought to be quite enough to preserve us from falling, and by falling, parting, I have mustered up strength to go on, to work at my task as far as I have been able to make it out, till I reach the grave: the grave for which the hour will come, and is fast approaching without my loudly calling Awake, arise, dear friend! Beset by pain or not, we must go on with a sad smile and a practical encouragement from one another. We have something of our own to care about, something godlike that we must not yield to any living creature, whoever it be. Your life proves an empty thing, you say. Empty! Do not blaspheme. Have you never done good? Have you never loved? Think of your mother and do good—set the eye to Providence. It is not as a mere piece of irony that God has placed you here: not as a mere piece of irony that He has given us those aspirations, those yearnings after happiness that are now making us both unhappy. Can't you trust Him a little longer?... How long will you remain at Seaforth?

Introduction

Does he himself propose to go anywhere? 1 was coming to see you on Saturday. Write if and when it does good even homœopathically to you, and be assured that to me it will always do.

Ever yours,—

JOSEPH MAZZINI.

To JANE WELSH CARLYLE, Seaforth.

My DEAR FRIEND,

I could not write yesterday, as I intended, on account of the death of Scipioni Petrucci's wife. . . . Yes; "sad at death, but not basely sad." That is what you must be, what I want you to be, and what a single moment of truly earnest thought and faith will cause you to be. Pain and joy, deception and fulfilled hopes are just, as I often said, the rain and the sunshine that must meet the traveller on his way. Bless the Almighty if He has thought proper to send the latter to you. Button or wrap your cloak around you against the first, but do not think a single moment that the one or the other have anything to do with the end of your journey. You know that; but you want the faith that would give you strength to fulfil the task shown by the intellect. These powers will give you that too, if you properly apply to them-affection, a religious belief, and the dead. You have affection for me, as I have for you: you would not shake mine? You would not add yourself to the temptations haunting me to wreck and despair? You would not make me worse than I am by your example, by your showing yourself selfish and materialist? You believe in God; don't you think, after all, that this is nothing but an ephemeral trial, and that He will shelter you at the journey's end under the wide wing of His paternal love? You had, have, though invisible to the eyes of the body, your mother, your father, too. Can't you commune with them? I know that a single moment of true fervent love for them will do more for you than all my talking! Were they now what you call living, would you not fly to them, hide your head in their bosom and be comforted, and feel that you owe to them to be strong-that they may never feel ashamed of their own Jane? Why can you think them to be dead, gone for ever, their loving immortal soul annihilated? Can you think that this vanishing for a time has made you less responsible to them? Can you, in a word, love them less because they are far from sight? I have often thought that the arrangement by which loved and loving beings are to pass through death is nothing but the last experiment appointed by God to human love; and often, as you know from me, I have felt that a moment of true soul-communing with my dead friend was opening a source of strength for me unhoped for, down here. Did we not often agree about these glimpses of the link between ours and the superior life? Shall we now begin to disagree? Be strong, then, and true to those you loved, and proud, nobly proud in the eyes of those you love or esteem. Some of them are deeply, silently suffering, but needing strength too, needing it perhaps from you. Get up and work; do not set yourself apart from us. When the Evil One wanted to tempt Jesus, he led Him into a solitude.

Believe me, my dear friend, ever yours.

Joseph Mazzini.

It was in these years of forced peace that Mazzini wrote some of his most important essays on Byron and Goethe: on the minor works of Dante; on Lamennais, whose Words of a Believer, condemned in the Pope's Encyclical as "small in size but of huge depravity," may have influenced Mazzini in writing the Duties of Man. In 1843 he had subjected the teaching of Carlyle to a profound criticism which is still far from commonplace, and which was highly original then. In the following year Carlyle stood staunchly by his critic in the episode of the mutilated correspondence. Mazzini discovered that his letters were being tampered with, and that English officials in high places were playing the spy for the Austrian Government. The case came up in the House of Commons, and roused general indignation. Sir James Graham made a lame defence, and charged Mazzini with promoting assassination-a charge afterwards honourably withdrawn. Carlyle pretended he knew nothing and desired to know nothing of Italian democracies and Young Italy's sorrows, of extraneous Austrian Emperors in Milan, or poor old chimerical Popes in Bologna; but there was something else he did know, as he testified in the Times. " I have had the honour to know M. Mazzini for a series of years, and, whatever I may think of his practical insight and skill in worldly affairs, I can with great freedom testify to all men that he, if ever I have seen one such, is a man of genius and virtue, a man of sterling veracity, humanity, and nobleness of mind, one of those rare men, numerable, unfortunately, but as units in this world, who are worthy to be called martyr souls, who, in silence, piously in their daily life, understand and practise what is meant by that." The incident turned out a blessing in disguise. It lifted Mazzini into English public life, and brought to him and to the Italian cause a number of loval helpers, particularly the Ashursts, of whose daughters one married James Stansfeld and another became Madame Venturi, Mazzini's biographer. Among other friends were William Shaen; Peter Taylor, Member for Leicester, the friend of Mill and "redresser-general of unheeded wrongs": the Chartists, Thomas Cooper and Henry Vincent; Joseph Toynbee, the father of Arnold Toynbee; W. J. Fox. the Unitarian orator; Joseph Cowen of Newcastle; W. J. Linton, the engraver; and George Jacob Holyoake, the veteran co-operator, who died but the other day. These names recall the social wrongs and remedies of the forties: on the one hand, bad harvests, famine, commercial crises, strikes, unemployment; on the other, the agitations for free trade. a free press, and the six points of the Charter. Dr. Holland Rose has pointed out1 that there was much in common between the moral-force Chartists and the Italian democrat. though the latter was at first inclined to band all Englishmen as "materialist and sectarian." Residence in a country where the industrial struggle was more fierce, more squalid, than in his own sunnier, lazier land, deepened his sense or the urgency of social reform. London, too, gave him the opportunity of knowing some Italian workmen at close quarters. He founded a political association among them, and began the publication of a journal in which a portion of the Duties of Man appeared. He befriended an unfortunate woman, and for years devoted a large share of his scanty income to the education of her children. The organboys attracted his notice. He was amazed to find that five or six Italians made a practice of inducing them to leave their rural homes in Parma and Liguria under fair promises of food and lodging and pay. Once here they were drilled in all sorts of beggary and deceit, and were cruelly treated. He was able to bring some of the slave-dealers to justice in the English courts and thereby terrify the rest. Better still, in 1841 he opened an evening school for the boys in Hatton Garden, and continued it for seven years—till his return to Italy—"a holy work, holily fulfilled." "They used to come between nine and ten o'clock at night, bringing their organs with them. We taught them reading, writing, arithmetic, simple geography, and the elements of drawing. On the Sunday evenings we gathered all our scholars together to listen to an hour's lecture upon Italian history, the lives of our great men, the outlines of natural philosophy-any subject in short that appeared to us calculated to elevate those unformed minds, darkened by poverty and their state of abject subjection to the will of others. Nearly every Sunday evening for two years, I lectured to them upon Italian history or elementary astronomy; a subject eminently religious, and calculated to purify the mind, which-reduced to popular phraseology and form-should be among the first subjects chosen for the education of the young."

The failure of the expeditions organised by "Young Italy" and the protracted exile of its chief had dissipated the society which had set out with such radiant morning hopes. Mazzini himself had his hours of disillusionment, which come to every high priest of the ideal, and which lower the level of life. He had failed to gauge the inertia of his countrymen. He read his own shining faith into them, and had fondly imagined that twenty millions from the Alps to Etna were ready to strike for freedom when the bugle called. He was impatient of men who temporised; he detested diplomacy, and thought the straight line was the shortest between two given points. The Right had uch compelling power over his own pure soul that he ould not understand men who shrank from plain duties. Their slackness made him blush—"as if I were lying." These were poor qualities for a conspirator, and Mazzini was failure in that $r\delta le$. He was too dogmatic in utterance, oo precipitate in action, and he invariably exaggerated the trength of his own side and underrated that of the enemy.

Meanwhile a party was growing up who had imbibed nuch of Mazzini's teaching, but who from all the reasons which hover between prudence and cowardice was inclined o slower and less direct methods than his uncompromising lemocratic nature would permit. This was the party of he Moderates, led by a group of able patriotic writers of varying views. Some counselled the postponement of political insurrection and urged the establishment of schools. avings-banks, model farms and railways. pairing of Unity, kindled hopes of a Federal Independence inder Charles Albert and a Liberal Pontiff. Three years before the death of Gregory XVI., Gioberti, in a book which leeply moved all Italian hearts, had prophesied the coming of a reforming Pope who should mediate justly between princes and people, and assert the moral supremacy of Rome over the world. In 1846 his prophecy seemed likely of fulfilment in the advent of Pius IX. Pius had attended he conclave which was to elect Gregory's successor. So ittle did he, a recently elected Cardinal, anticipate the nonour in store for himself, that he had brought with him copy of Gioberti's book as a humble offering to the new Pope. One of his first acts as Pius IX, was to pardon the political prisoners and exiles, numbering some thousands n all. The enthusiasm of the populace knew no bounds. The deliverer of Italy had arrived. All things suddenly seemed possible. "To the religious, impulsive, ill-educateds everage Italian, a Pope's sympathy meant more than all he philosophy and idealism of Young Italy." That night, it, was said, every house in Rome was illuminated, with one ominous exception—that of the Austrian Ambassador. Wild umours attached themselves to the new pontiff-that he was "un gran' Carbonaro," or even the secret head of "Young Italy," whispered some But there were three forces at work soon to shatter the popular idol-the lesuits. Metternich, and the Pone himself. The Jesuits wielded their secret influence far and wide, and at Rome controlled the police and civil service. They blocked the Pope at every turn Away in Vienna, where their power was great, Metternich had pronounced a Liberal Pope "the preatest misfortune of the age," and openly insulted him by filling Ferrara a Panal cuty, with Austrian troops. The Pone himself, full of good intentions, was bewildered, one day promising legal reforms and railway construction, the next refusing to sanction a citizen guard, the third prohibiting public meetings because they interrupted the studies of youth ! The people were clamouring to go to war with Austria Diplomatic negotiations however, led Metternich to withdraw the imperial troops from Ferrara (December 16. 1847) But the Pope had had enough of "modern progress" "They are mistaken, who would see in the Council of State instituted by me." he declared at its opening ceremony. "the realisation of their Utopias and the germ of institutions incompatible with the Pontifical sovereignty." The Sultan was not the only "sick man" in Europe

was not the only "sick man" in Europe

Mazmi watched this movement closely, and advised his scattered followers to use the enthusiasm for national ends at the sucrifice of republicanism, if necessary I his year be wrote several articles to the People's Journal, in one of which he foretold the coming storm "Europe rapidly approaches a tremendous crisis, a supreme contest between peoples and their despots, which no human power can henceforth hinder, but which the active concurrence of all the brave and good would render shorter and less severe and whose final result will be a new map of Europe "The year of revolutions arrived—1846—"when all time's sea was foam "From Palermo and Paris, Vienna and Berlin came the shouts of the multitudes uprisen to reckon with their rulers. The King of the French escaped in a cab, and Metternich in a cart. The Austrian power was rapidly crumbling in the northern towns of Italy Mazmin hurried to Paris and thence to Milan, where he had an enthusastic to Paris and thence to Milan, where he had an enthusastic reception. But victory tarned Diseasons, fomented parity by Mazmin's presence, arose between monarchists and republicans over the form of government to be set up when the Austrians were routed! The feeble indecision and delay of Charles Albert, "the Wobbling King," led medical to one disaster after another in the field, and to one disaster after another in the field, and the water to pass before the foscepter was finally outset, and then the honous were to fall to Cavour and Victor Emmanue!

In Rome, however, the fortunes of the Liberals were improving so rapidly that the air of the Ourmal became stifling The Pope, following the ruling fashion, escaped in a chaise to Gaeta. Rome was free. A provisional, government was set up which appealed to universal suffrage to elect a Constituent Assembly of one hundred and fifty members. Among the deputies elected were a general of volunteers and his standard-hearer who had come from the North, defeated but not beaten-Garibaldi and Mazzini Twenty years earlier Gambaldi had joined the ranks of "Young Italy" at Marseilles, and then tasted of exile and adventure in South America. The Assembly by an overwhelming majority declared for a Republic, abolished the hated temporal power of the Pope, but guaranteed him liberty to exercise his spiritual office. Thus opened one of the most moving pages in history Mazzini had entered the city "one evening early in March, with a deep sense of awe, almost of worship " It is not difficult to understand the fascination of Rome, and the desire to see her capital of a united Italy But with Mazzini the desire had been a master passion which went far beyond the dream of a political centre Gioberti looked to a reformed Papacy. but in Mazzini's vision "the city of the soul" was the Temple of Humanity sending forth a new religion of duty, sacrifice, and brotherhood. When they cheered his first using in the Assembly he resterated his faith "These manifestations of admiration should not be addressed by you to me, but rather by me to you," he said, "for what little of good I may have accomplished, or attempted, has owed its inspiration to my life's talisman, Rome. In my heart I have said, It is not possible that the City that has already lived two lives, should not arise to see a third. After the Rome of conquering soldiers, after the Rome of the triumphant Word, so I kept saying to myself, there shall come the Rome of virtue and of example, after the City of the Emperors, after that of the Popes, shall come that of the Popels "It was a noble vision, seen by all good men under one form or another

Mazzini now endeavoured to unite the scattered republican forces Goaded by Austrian biutality, Charles Albert was once more marching akainst Radet/ky, but he was no match for the old general and the Piedmontese suffered a crushing defeat at Novara The King abdicated in favour of his eldest son Victor Emmanuel II, and four months later died biokenhearted in a Poituguese monastery. In Rome the news of Novara led to the election of Mazzini, Saffi and Armellini as triumvirs, and from the Papal Court at Gaeta this called forth an appeal to the Catholic Powers for "armed intervention to free the States of the Church from the faction. of rogues" The response came from an unexpected quarter In the 5th Article of the French Constitution of 1848 it was written, "France respects foreign nationalities, her might shall never be employed against the liberty of any people !" With what duplicity this promise was broken in "the meanest of modern political crimes " can only be briefly recounted here French troops landed and marched on the young sister-republic Mazzini was an idealist, but he was no coward. He would fight for a righteous principle There were virtues more precious than peace A Committee of War was formed to organise the defence under Roselli and Garibaldi. On May 7th Ferdinand de Lesseus on behalf of France came to terms with the Roman Republic He acted in good faith, but the agreement was a ruse of his employers; and the French general Oudmot laid siege to cession Banished from the scene of action, without money, and dependent on secret informers, who rarely possessed full or accurate information his great powers of leadership were wasted on dark consuracies and futile insurrections. by which he hurt and hindered men who were working, like himself for a common country. Some of these men had been ardent republicans, but had been convinced by the disunion and failure of the Vear of Revolutions that the casual opposition of undisciplined forces would never drive out the trained troops of the enemy Daniel Manin, a republican idealist with strong practical instincts backed by a stainless life, in his defence of Venice against the Austrians, had raised the Venetian character to heights as heroic as those reached by the Romans under Mazzini But with Garibaldi and many old members of "Young Italy," Manin had now come to believe that the help of the Piedmontese army with its King and Minister were indispensable to the redemption of Italy, and that the republic must be postponed. Gioberti had awakened from his dreams of a reformed Papacy, and had written a new book, in which Piedmont figured as the regenerator of Italy with the help of France And it was to this policy that parties of all sorts were coming Mazzini held obstinately to the programme of Sayona, unable to imagine a profligate King and a cunning Minister as the saviours of the nation But "men fight to lose the battle, and the thing they fought for comes about in spite of their defeat, and when it comes it turns out not to be what they meant, and other men have to fight for what they meant under another name." The temporal power of the Papacy ended and the unity of Italy was achieved A recent English historian divides the honours, nnequally, between the sword of Gaubaldi and the brun of Cayour, and says nothing of the soul of Massini It is a somewhat shallow indepent, but if it is meant to imply that the Italy of 1870 was not what Mazzini had wished to call into being, it may stand "This medley of opportunists ! and cowards and little Macchiavellis, that let themselves , be dragged behind the suggestion of the foreigner-I thought to call up the soul of Italy, and I only see its corpse" The Liberalism of Cayour had triumphed The old generation had "praised God, the new generation thought more of keeping its powder dry. The former had had its poetry, its great literary works, its appeals to history : the latter wrote leaflets and pamphlets, and spoke through the press, which had come into power since 1847 heroic idealism had gone, and rationalism and science took its place. The new spirit was matter-of-fact, thinking more of the present than the future, fearful of pitching its hones too high, quietly, cautiously laying the foundations, determined to go on no quixotic ventures, but slowly prepaie, and only fight when the odds were on its side Mazzini flinched from no sacrifice, he was ready to surrender the present convenience and happiness of the whole community, its family life, its trade, in a desperate struggle. The new movement shrank from the terrible and impossible appeal. but it put its faith in discipline, it was willing for the sake of union to sacrifice spontaneity, to be unfair to opponents, to crush minorities "

The difference between the two protagonists could not he hetter illustrated than by repeating a couple of anecdotes which Mr Myers put side by side

"When Cayour was about six years old he was taken on a posting journey On one stage of this journey the horses were unusually bad The little boy asked who was responsible for the horses He was told it was the postmaster He asked who appointed the postmaster He was told it was the syndic He demanded to be taken at once to the syndic to get the postmaster dismissed "

"Mazzini as a child was very delicate. When he was about six years old he was taken for his first walk. For the first time he saw a beggar, a venerable old man. He stood transfixed, then broke from his mother, threw his arms round the beggar's neck and kissed him, crying, 'Give him something, mother, give him something' 'Love him well, lady,' said the aged man; 'he is one who will love the people '"

The ways of the children were the ways of the men who can magne Mazum barlering Savoy and Nice at Plombires, and negotiating the marriage of Prince Napoleon and Princess Clottled? And in the article of death one passed away protesting his belief in God, while the other "festaned a devoted priest to absolve his last bour, and made his way into heaven itself by a stroke of dimensare." I

The London to which Mazzani returned after the fall of the Roman Republic was far less desolate than the London of 1837 There were now old and new friends, not a few, proud to welcome the Triumvir who had focussed in himself the fairest hones of an aspiring people, an

"established point of light whence rays Traversed the world"

The homes of the Ashursts, the Stansfelds and others were always open to him. He met many distinguished men of the time. Swinburne sang his piaises. But no man was less easily seduced from the path of duty by the temptations of friendship and wealth. Nor was he the transcendenialist who turns cynic in the face of defeat. His head was still full of schemes and his days full of toil for the salivation of his country.

Open my heart, and you will see Graved inside of it "Italy"

He worked incessantly to secure the "moral help" of England, and gathered into the Society of the Friends of Italy a number of the best Liberals of the day England had

Music and poetry were favourite topics. Henry Sidgwick, we have recently learnt, was much impressed by him "London is a stimulating place." he wrote to his mother in 1867, "one meets stimulating neonle. I will tell you who is one-Mazzini. I met him the other night at dinner, and he attacked me about Spiritualism, and bore down upon me with such a current of clear, eager argument-I was quite overwhelmed." No one who met him forgot his honest eyes, "readily flashing into indignation or humour, always with the latent expression of exhaustless resolution." In spite of failing health he worked on tenaciously, obstinately "I hear you are rather unwell." he wrote to a friend "Don't It is absurd to be ill, while nations are struggling for liberty. He published From the Council to God, and was delighted at the success it met with in its English translation in the Formerally He was keenly interested in the English movements for women's suffrage and against state regulation of vice But his chief work in these last years was to fight the immature socialism of the time "

In his last message to the working men of Italy, he bade them "love and work for this great, inhappy country of ours, called to high destinates, but stayed upon the road by those who cannot, will not know the road. This is the best way you can have of lowing me." He died in the house of frends at Pies, early in March 1872, and was burned beside his mother, on one of the highest terraces in the cemetry of Starleino. Outside his native; and MAZZIN'S writings may be divided into literary, social, and ophictal Among his earliest were "Dell' Amor Patrio di Dante" (1526 or 1827), published in "Il Subalpino" 1837, and contributions to the "Indicatore Conoves," founded by him in 1828, and to the "Indicatore Livornese," also founded by Mazzini after the suppression of the former journal, a fate shared by the latter His chief literary essays were composed in England, in which country he lived for many years as an exile from 1837 "Westimister Review" ("On the Literary Movement in Italy," October 1837; if "Paolo Sarpi,"

To you, sons and daughters of the people, I dedicate his little book, wherein I have pointed out the principles in the name and strength of which you may, if you so vill, accomplish your mission in Italy, a mission of equiblician, progress for all and of emancipation for ourselves. Let those who are specially favoured by recursistances or in undestanding, and able to convehend these principles more easily, explain and comment in them to the others, and may that spirit of love inspire hem with which, as I wrote, I thought on your griefs and no your virgin appraisants towards the new hile which—nee the unjust inequality now stifling your faculties is wercome—you will kindle in the Italian country.

I said so. I saw that Italy, such as our souls prefigured her, could not exist until a Moral Law, acknowledged as higher than all those now put as intermediaries between God and man, should overthrow the basis of every tyrannic authority, the Papacy And I said so Nor did the furious accusations, calumnies, and derision hurled at me ever make me betray you or your cause or desert the banner of the future, not even when you yourselves-led astray by the teachings of men, idolaters rather than believers-forsook me for " those who, having trafficked in your blood, turned their looks away from you. The strong and sincere handclasp of some of the best of you, sons and daughters of the people, comforted me for the desertion of others and for the many most bitter disillusionments inflicted on my soul by men whom I had loved well and who had professed to love me. THE DUTIES OF MAN

TO THE ITALIAN WORKING-MEN

I WANT to speak to you of your duties I want to speak to you, as my heart dictates to me, of the most sacred things which we know-of God, of Humanity, of the Fatherland, of the Family Listen to me with love, ever as I shall speak to you with love My words are words of conviction matured by long years of sorrow and or observation and of study The duties which I am going to point out to you I strive and shall strive as long as I live to fulfil, to the utmost of my power I may make mistakes, but my heart is true I may deceive myself, but I will not deceive you. Hear me therefore as a brother, judge freely among yourselves, whether it seems to you that I speak the truth, abandon me a you think that I preach what is false; but follow me and do according to my teaching if you find me ar apostle of truth. To be mistaken is a misfortune to be pitied, but to know the truth and not to conform one actions to it is a crime which Heaven and Earth condemn. •

Why do I speak to you of your attes before speaking to you of your registr? Why me a society in which all voluntarily or involuntanily, oppress you, in which the excretse of all the rights which belong to man is constantly denied you, in which insiery is your lot, and what is called happiness is for other classes of men why do I speak to you of self-sacrifice and not onquest yof virtue, moral improvement, ductation, and not of material multi-being? This is a question which I must answer before going further, because here precisely les the difference between our school and many others which are being preached to-day in Europe, because, moreover, it is a question which rises readily in the indignant mind of the suffering working-man

We are poor, enclaved, unhappy, speak to us of better material conditions, of theirs, of physics S Tell 18 we are downed to suffer for eye, or if we too may enjoy in our turn. Preach Duly to our mastes, to the classes adove us winks treat as the makines, and momploise the blessings which belong to all. To us speak of pripts, speak of the means of vinducting them, speak of our strength. Wait till we have a recognised existence, then you shall peak to us of dulters and of storying. This is what many of our working-men say, and follow teachers and associations which respond to their desires. They forget one thing only, and that is, that the doctine which they invoke has been preached for the last fifty years without producing the slightest material improvement in the condition of the working-geople

For the last fifty years whatever has been done for the cause of progress and of good against absolute governments and hereditary aristocracies has been done in the name of the Rights of Man, in the name of liberty as the means, and of well-being as the object of existence All the acts of the French Revolution and of the revolutions which followed and imitated it were consequences of a Declaration of the Rights of Man. All the works of the philosophers who prepared Tit were based upon a theory of liberty, and upon the need of making known to every individual his own 'rights All the revolutionary schools preached that man is born for happiness, that he has the right to seek it by all the means in his power, that no one has the right to impede him in this search, and that he has the right of overthrowing all the obstacles which he may encounter on his path. And the obstacles were overthrown, liberty was conquered. It endured for years in many countries, in some it still endures. Has the condition of the people improved? Have the millions who live by the daily labour of their hands gained the least fraction of the well-being hoped for and promised to them?

No, the condition of the people has not improved. rather it has grown and grows worse in nearly every country, and especially here where I write the price of the necessaries of life has gone on continually rising, the wages of the working-man in many branches of industry falling, and the population multiplying. In nearly every country the lot of workers has become more uncertain, more precarious, and the labour crises which condemn thousands of working-men to idleness for a time have become more frequent. The yearly increase of emigration from one country to another, and from Europe to other parts of the world, and the evergrowing number of beneficent institutions, the increase of poor rates and provisions for the destitute, are enough to prove this The latter prove also that public attention is waking more and more to the ills of the people, but their inability to lessen those ills to any visible extent points to a no less continual increase of poverty among the classes which they endeavour to help.

And nevertheless, in these last fifty years, the sources of social wealth and the sum of material blessings have steadily increased Production has doubled. Commerce, amid continual crises, inevitable in the utter absence of organisation, has acquired a greater force of activity and a wider sphere for its operations Communication has almost everywhere been made secure and rapid. and the price of commodities has fallen in consequence of the diminished cost of transport. And, on the other hand, the idea of rights inherent in human nature is to-day generally accepted; accepted in word and, hypocritically, even by those who seek to evade it in deed Why, then, has the condition of the people not improved? Why is the consumption of products, instead of being divided equally among all the members of the social body in Europe, concentrated in the hands of a small number of men forming a new aristocracy? Why has the new impulse given to industry and commerce produced, not the well-being of the many, but the luxury of the few?

The answer is clear to those who will look a little closely into things [Men are creatures of education, and act only according to the principle of education given to them? The men who have promoted revolutions hitherto have based them upon the idea of the rights belonging to the individual, the revolutions conquered liberty-individual liberty, liberty of teaching, liberty of belief, liberty of trade, liberty in everything and for everybody But of what use was the recognition of their rights to those who had no means of exercising them? What did liberty of teaching mean to those who had neither time nor means to profit by it, or liberty of trade to those who had nothing to trade with. neither capital nor credit? In all the countries where these principles were proclaimed society was composed of a small number of individuals who possessed the land, the credit, the capital, and of vast multitudes of men who had nothing but their own hands and were forced to give the labour of them to the former class. on any terms, in order to live, and forced to spend the whole day in material and monotonous toil For these, constrained to battle with hunger, what was liberty but an illusion and a bitter irony? To make it anything else it would have been necessary for the men of the well-to-do classes to consent to reduce the hours of labour, to increase the remuneration, to institute free and uniform education for the masses, to make the instruments of labour accessible to all, and to provide a bonus fund for the working-man endowed with capacity and good intentions But why should they do it? Was not well-being the supreme object in life? Were not material blessings desirable before all other things? Why should they lessen their own enjoyment for the advantage of others? Let those who could, help When society has secured to everybody who can use them the free exercise of the rights belonging to human nature, it does all that is required of it If there be any one who is unable from the fatality of his own circumstances to exercise any of these rights, he must resign himself and not blame others -

It was natural that they should say thus, and thus, in fact, they did say. And this attitude of mind towards i the poor in the classes privileged by fortune soon became the attitude of every individual towards every other. Each man looked after his own rights and the improvement of his own condition without seeking to provide for others, and when his rights clashed with those of others. there was war, not a war of blood, but of gold and of cunning, a war less manly than the other, but equally destructive, cruel war, in which those who had the means and were strong relentlessly crushed the weak or the unskilled. In this continual warfare, men were educated in egoism and in greed for material welfare exclusively Liberty of belief destroyed all community of faith Liberty of education produced moral anarchy Men without a common tie, without unity of religious belief and of aim, and whose sole vocation was enjoyment, sought every one his own road, not heeding if in pursuing it they were trampling upon the heads of their brothers-brothers in name and enemies in fact. To this we are come to-day, thanks to the theory of rights

Certainly rights exist, but where the rights of an individual come into conflict with those of another. how can we hope to reconcile and harmonise them. without appealing to something superior to all rights? And where the rights of an individual, or of many individuals, clash with the rights of the Country, to what tribunal are we to appeal? If the right to well-being, to the greatest possible well-being, belongs to every living person, who will solve the difficulty between the workingman and the manufacturer? If the right to existence is the first and inviolable right of every man, who shall demand the sacrifice of that existence for the benefit of other men? Will you demand it in the name of Country. of Society, of the multitude of your brothers? What is Country, in the opinion of those of whom I speak, but the place in which our individual rights are most secure?

that is Society but a collection of men who have agreed bring the strength of the many in support of the rights f each? And after having taught the individual for fty years that Society is established for the purpose of ssuring to him the exercise of his rights, would you ask im to sacrifice them all to Society, to submit himself. need be, to continuous toil, to prison, to exile, for the ake of improving it? After having preached to him verywhere that the object of life is well-being, would ou all at once bid him give up well-being and life itself o free his country from the foreigner, or to procure etter conditions for a class which is not his own? after having talked to him for years of material interests. low can you maintain that, finding wealth and power in us reach, he ought not to stretch out his hand to grasp hem, even to the injury of his brothers? -

Italian Working-men, this is not a chance thought of ny mind, without a foundation in fact. It is history, he history of our own times, a history the pages of which drip with blood, the blood of the people. Ask all he men who transformed the revolution of 1830 into a nere substitution of one set of persons for another, and, or example, made the bodies of your French comrades, who were killed fighting in the Three Days, into steppingstones to raise themselves to power, all their doctrines, perfore 1830, were founded on the old theory of the rights of man, not upon a belief in his duties. You call them to-day traitors and apostates, and yet they were only consistent with their own doctrine. They fought with sincerity against the Government of Charles X because that Government was directly hostile to the classes from which they sprang, and violated and endeavoured to suppress their rights. They fought in the name of the well-being which they did not possess as much of as they thought they ought to have Some were persecuted for freedom of thought, others, men of powerful mind, saw themselves neglected, shut out from offices occupied by men of capacity inferior to their own. Then the wrongs of the people angered them also Then they wrote boldly and in good faith ibout the rights which belong to every man. Afterards, when their own political and intellectual rights and been secured, when the path to office was opened to them, when they had conqueted the well-being which hey sought, they forgot the people, forgot that the millions, inferior to them in education and in aspirations, were seeking the exercise of other rights and the achievement of well-being of another sort, and they set their minds at rest and troubled no longer about anybody but themselves. Why call them traitors?

There lived and wrote at that time in France a man whom you ought never to forget, more powerful in mind than all of them put together. He was our opponent then; but he believed in Duty; in the duty of sacrificing the whole existence to the common good, to the pursuit and triumph of Truth He studied the men and the circumstances of the time deeply, and did not allow himself to be led astray by applause, or to be discouraged by disappointment. When he had tried one way and failed, he tried yet another for the amelioration of the masses And when the course of events had shown him that there was one power alone capable of achieving it, when the people had proved themselves in the field of action more virtuous and more believing than all those who had pretended to deal with their cause, he, Lamennais, author of the Words of a Believer, which you have all read, became the best apostle of the cause in which we are brothers. There you see in him, and in the men of whom I have been speaking, the difference between the men of rights and those of duty To the first the acquisition of their individual rights, by withdrawing stimulus, proves a sufficient check to further effort, the work of the second only ceases here on earth with life lack the consolation of publicity and of praise, what obligation, what stimulus to constancy can maintain upon the path of progress men who degrade the holy social war which we carry on to a mere battle for their rights? I speak, be it understood, of the generality and not of the exceptions to be met with in all schools of thought. When the hot blood and the impulse of reaction against tyranny which naturally draw youth into the conflict have calmed down, what can prevent these men, after a few years of effort, after the disappointments inevitable in any such enterprise, from growing weary? Why should they not prefer any sort of repose to an unquiet existence, agitated by continual struggles and danger, and liable to end any day in imprisonment, or the scaffold, or exile? It is the too common story of most of the Italians of to-day, imbued as they are with the old French ideas, a very sad story, but how can it be altered except by changing the principle with which they start as their guide? How and in whose name are they to be convinced that danger and disappointment ought to make them stronger, that they have got to fight not for a few years, but for their whole lives? Who shall say to a man, Go on struggling for your rights, when to struggle for them costs him dearer than to abandon them? + .

And among the peoples who are completely enslaved, where the conflict has very different dangers, where every step made towards a better state of things is signed with the blood of a marry, where the operations

And even in a society constituted on a juster basis than our own, who shall convince a believer in the theory of rights solely that he has to work for the common purpose and devote himself to the development of the social sda? Suppose he should rebel, suppose he should feel himself strong and should say to you. I break the social compact, my suchinations, my faculties, call me sitewhere, I have a sacred and smoothable right to devolop them, and I dhoose to be at war with everybody what answer can you give him while he keeps to his the should be supposed to the social supposed to the s together in a community does not create a single one. Society has greater strength, not more rights, than the individual. How, then, are you going to prove to the individual that he must merge his will in the will of those who are his brothers, whether in the Country or in the wide fellowship of Humanity? By means of the executioner, of the prison? Societies easting up till now have used such means But that is war, and we want peace, that is tyrannical repression, and we want education.

Education, we have said; and this is the great word which sums up our whole doctrine. The vital question agitating our century is a question of education we have to do is not to establish a new order of things by violence An order of things so established is always tyrannical even when it is better than the old to merthrow by force the brute force which opposes itself to-day to every attempt at improvement, and then propose for the approval of the nation, free to express its will what we believe to be the best order of things and by every possible means educate men to develop it and ac in conformity with it. The theory of rights enables us to rise and overthiow obstacles, but not to found a strong and lasting accord between all the elements which compose the nation With the theory of happiness, of well being, as the primary aim of existence we shall only form egoistic men, worshippers of the material, who will carry the old passions into the new order of things and corrup it in a few months. We have therefore to find a principle of education superior to any such theory, which shall guide men to better things, teach them constance in self-sacrifice and link them with their fellow men without making them dependent on the ideas of a single man or on the strength of all And this principle is Duty We must convince men that they, sons of one only God must obey one only law, here on earth, that each one o them must live, not for himself, but for others, that the object of their life is not to be more or less happy, bu to make themselves and others better, that to figh against injustice and error for the benefit of their brother

Italian Working-men, my Brothers! understand me When I say that the knowledge of their rights is not enough to enable men to effect any appreciable or lasting improvement, I do not ask you to renounce these rights. I only say that they cannot exist except as a consequence of duties fulfilled, and that one must begin with the latter in order to arrive at the former And when I say that by proposing happiness, well-being, or material interest as the aim of existence, we run the risk of producing egoists. I do not mean that you should never strive after these things. I say that material interests pursued alone, and not as a means, but as an end, lead always to this most disastrous result. When under the Emperors, the old Romans asked for nothing but bread and amusements, they became the most abject race conceivable, and after submitting to the stunid and ferocious tyranny of the Emperors they basely fell into slavery to the invading Barbarians. In France and eisewhere the enemies of all social progress have sown corruption and tried to divert men's minds from ideas of change by furthering the development of material activity And shall we help the enemy with our own hands? Material improvement is essential, and we shall strive to win it for ourselves, but not because the one thing necessary for man is to be well fed and housed, but rather because you cannot have a sense of your own dignity or any moral development while you are engaged, as at the present day, in a continual duel with want You work ten or twelve hours a day how can you find time to educate vourselves? Most of you earn hardly enough to keep yourselves and your families how can you then find means to educate yourselves? The uncertainty of your employment and the frequent interruptions in it cause you to alternate between too much work and periods of idleness; how are you to acquire habits of order, regularity, and assiduity? The scantiness of your earnings does away with any hope of saving our own old age . how are you to educate yourselves nto habits of economy? Many of you are compelled y poverty to separate your children, we will not say rom the careful bringing-up-what sort of bringing-up an the poor wives of working-men give their children?out from the love and the watchful eve of their mothers. nd to send them out, for the sake of a few halfpence, o unwholesome labour in factories how, in such anditions, can family affection unfold itself and he nnobled? You have not the rights of citizens, nor any articipation, by election or by vote, in the laws which . egulate your actions and your life how should you feel he pride of citizenship or have any zeal for the State, or incere affection for the laws? Justice is not dealt out o you with the same equal hand as to the other classes thence, then, are you to learn respect and love for justice? ociety treats you without a shadow of sympathy . 2 whence are you to learn sympathy with society? You seed, then, a change in your material conditions to enable ou to develop morally, you need to work less so as to save some hours of your day to devote to the improvenent of your minds, you need a sufficient remuneration of your labour to put you in a position to accumulate ayings, and so set your minds at rest about the future. and to purify yourselves above all of every sentiment of retaliation, every impulse of revenge, every thought of injustice towards those who have been unjust to you. You must strive, then, for this change, and you will btain it, but you must strive for it as a means, not as an nd, strive for it from a sense of duty, not only as a zeht, strive for it in order to make vourselves better, 10t only to make yourselves materially happy If not, what difference would there be between you and your yrants? They are tyrants precisely because they do not think of anything but well-being, pleasure and ower . .

To make yourselves better, this must be the aim of rour life. You cannot make yourselves permanently less inhappy except by improving yourselves. Tyrants will trise by the thousand among you, if you fight only in the name of material interests, or of a particular organisation. A change of social organisation makes little difference if you and the other classes keep the passions and the legisism of to-day, organisations are like certain plants which yield poison or remedies according to the way in which they are administered Good men make bad organisations good, and bad men make good organisations bad. You have got to improve the classes which, voluntarily of involuntarily of press you to-day, and convince them of their duties, but you will never succeed in this unless you begin by making yourselves

better as far as possible When therefore you hear men who preach the necessity of a social transformation telling you that they can accomplish it by invoking your rights only, be grateful to them for their good intentions, but distrustful of the outcome The ills of the poor man are known, in part at least, to the well to-do classes . known but not felt In the general indifference born of the absence of a common faith, in the egoism, inevitably resulting from the continual preaching through so many years of the doctrine of material well-being, those who do not suffer have grown accustomed little by little to consider these alls as a sad necessity of the social order and to leave the trouble of remedying them to the generations to come The difficulty is not to convince them, but to shake them out of mertia and to induce them, when they are convinced, to act, to associate themselves, to unite with you in brotherly fellowship for the purpose of creating such a social organisation as shall put an end, as far as the conditions of humanity allow, to your ills and to their own fears Now, this is a work of faith, of faith in the mission which God has given to the human creature here upon earth, of faith in the responsibility weighing upon all those who do not fulfil that mission. and in the duty which bids every one work continually, and with self-sacrifice, for the cause of Truth All possible theories of rights and of material well-being can only lead you to attempts which, so long as they remain isolated and dependent on your strength only, will not succeed, but can only bring about the worst of social crimes, a civil war between class and class

Italian Working-men, my Brothers! When Christ came and changed the face of the world, He did not speak of rights to the rich, who had no need to conquer them, nor to the poor, who would perhaps have abused them, in imitation of the rich. He did not speak of utility or of self-interest to a people whom utility and selfinterest had corrunted He spoke of Duty. He spoke of Love, of Sacrifice, of Faith He said that they only should be first among all who had done good to all by their work And these thoughts, breathed into the ear of a society which had no longer any spark of life, reanimated it, conquered the millions, conquered the world, and caused the education of the human race to progress a degree. Italian Working-men! we live in an epoch like Christ's We live in the midst of a society rotten as that of the Roman Empire, and feel in our souls the need of reviving and transforming it, of associating all its members and its workers in one single faith, under one single law, and for one purpose, the free and progressive development of all the faculties which God has planted in His creatures. We seek the reign of God upon earth as in heaven, or better, that the earth shall be a preparation for heaven, and society an endeavour towards a progressive approach to the Divine Idea

But every act of Christ's represented the fauth which the preached, and round Him there were apostes who embodied in their acts the faith which they had accepted Be such as they, and you will conquer. Freach Duty to the men of the classes above you, and fulfil, as far as possible, your own duties, preach virue, searfice, love, and be yourselves virtuous and prompt to self-actifice and the yourselves virtuous and prompt to self-actifice and they have the window of the property of the proper

a nation which will give them a name, education, work and fair wages, together with the self-respect and vocation of men, while you kindle their spirit for the inevitable struggle for which they must prepare themselves, so that they may conquer all this in spite of all the forces of our evil government and of the foreigner, strive to instruct yourselves, to grow better, and to educate yourselves to the full knowledge and to the practice of your duties This is an impossible task for the masses in a great part of Italy, no plan of popular education could be realised among us without a change in the material condition of the people, and without a political revolution, they who deceive themselves into hoping for it, and preach it as an indispensable preparation for any attempt at emancipation, preach a gospel of inertia, nothing else. But the few among you whose circumstances are somewhat better, and to whom a sojourn in foreign lands has afforded more liberal means of education. can do it, and therefore ought to do it. And these few, once imbued with the true principles upon which the education of a people depends, will be enough to spread them among the thousands as a guide for their path and a protection from the fallacies and the false doctrines which will come to waylay them.

THE origin of your duties is in God The definition of your duties is found in His law. The progressive discovery and the application of His law is the task of Humanity.

God exists I do not need nor do I wish to prove it to you, to try to do so would seem to me blasphemy. as to deny it would seem foolishness God exists, because we exist God lives in our conscience in the conscience of Humanity, in the universe which surrounds Our conscience invokes Him in the most solemn moments of grief and of 107 Humanity has been able to transform, to pollute, but never to suppress His holy The Universe manifests Him in the order, the harmony, the intelligence of its motions and of its laws There are no atheists among you, if there were, they would deserve not curses, but tears. He who can deny God on a starry night, or beside the graves of his dearest ones, or in the presence of martyrdom, is greatly unhappy or greatly wicked The first atheist was doubtless a man who had hidden a crime from all other men and sought by denying God to rid himself of the only witness from whom he could not hide it, and to suffocate the remorse which tormented him Perhaps he was a tyrant who had stolen half the soul of his brothers from them with their freedom, and who tried to substitute the worship of brute force for faith in duty and in Eternal Right After him there came now and again, from century to century, men whom philosophical aberration led to insiguate atheistic doctrines, but they were very few, and much ashamed. Then in days not long ago there came a multitude who, irritated by a false and studid idea of God which some caste or tyrannic power had set up for its own advantage, denied God Hunself, but it was for an instant only, and during that instant their need of a divinity was so great that they had to worship the goddess Reason, the goddess Nature. To-day there are men who abhor all religion because they see the corruption in actual creeds, and do not divine the purity of those of the future, but not one among them dares to call himself an atheist. There are priests who prostitute the name of God to venal calculations, or to fear of the powerful, there are tyrants who blaspheme it by invoking it as the protector of their tyranny But because the light of the sun comes to us often dimmed and clouded by foul vapours, shall we deny the existence of the sun and the vivifying power of its rays upon the universe? Because out of liberty wicked men sometimes produce anarchy, shall we curse liberty? Faith in God burns with an immortal light through all the hes and corruption with which men have darkened His name. Lies and corruption pass away, as tyrannies pass away God remains, and the People remains, God's image upon earth. Even as the People, through slavery, suffering, and poverty, conquers, step by step, conscience, strength, emancipation, so out of the ruins of corrupt systems of religion the holy name of God arises resplendent. surrounded by a purer, a more fervent, and more rational worship

I do not therefore speak to you of God in order to demonstrate His existence to you, or to tell you that you ought to adore Him-you do adore Him, even without naming Him, every time that you feel your life and the life of the beings around you-but to tell you how you ought to adore Him, and to admonish you of an error which dominates the minds of many men in the classes which rule you, and, through their example, many of your minds, an error as grave and as fatal as atheism

This error is the separation, more or less evident, of God from His work, from the earth upon which you have to fulfil one period of your existence. On the one side there are people who say to you, "True, God exists, but all you can do is to admit His existence and to adore Him No one can understand and explain the relation between God and men It is a question which your conscience must debate with God himself. Think what you will about it, but do not propound your belief to your fellows, or seek to apply it to the things of this Politics are one thing, religion another Do not confound them, leave the things of heaven to the established spiritual authority, whatever it may be, reserving to yourselves the right of refusing it credence if it seem to you to betray its mission, let every one think and believe in his own way, you need only occupy yourselves in common about earthly things Materialists or spiritualists, whichever you may be, do you believe in liberty, and in the equality of man? do you want wellbeing for the majority? do you want universal suffrage? Unite vourselves to obtain these desires, it is not necessary for this that you should have a common understanding on questions to do with heaven "

On the other side you have men who tell you "God exists, but He is too great, too superior to all created things for you to hope to attain to Him by human works The earth is clay Life is but for an hour Withdraw yourselves from the first as much as you can, do not hold the second above its worth. What indeed are all earthly interests in comparison with the immortal life of your souls? Think of this, look up to heaven What does it matter in what condition you live here below? You are destined to die, and God will judge you according to the thoughts which you have given, not to earth, but to Him Do you suffer? Bless the Lord who sends you these afflictions Terrestrial existence is a period of trial, your earth a land of exile. Despise it and rise above it. In the midst of sufferings, of poverty, of slavery, you can turn to God, and sanctify yourselves by adoration of Him, by prayer, by scorn of worldly things, and by faith in a future in which you will have a great reward"

Of those who speak to you thus, the first do not love God; the second do not know Him.

Man is one, say to the first You cannot divide him in two, and so contrive that he should agree with you in the principles which ought to regulate the organisation of society, while he differs from you as to his origin, his destimes, and his law of life here below Religions govern the world When the men of India believed themselves to be born, some from the head, others from the arms, others from the feet of Brahma, their divinity, they organised society by a division of mankind into castes, assigning to the first the heritage of intellectual work, to the second the business of war, to the third the servile labours, condemning themselves to an immobility which still endures and will endure while belief in this principle still exists. When the Christians declared to the world that men were all sons of God and brothers in Firm, all the doctrines of the legislators and philosophers of antiquity laying down the existence of two natures in man did not avail to prevent the abolition of slavely involving a radically different organisation of society For every advance in religious belief we can show you a corresponding social advance in the history of Humanity but for your doctrine of indifference in the matter of religion, you can show us no other consequence than anarchy You have been able to destroy. never to build up, deny this, if you can By dint of exaggerating a principle contained in Protestantism and which Protestantism to-day feels the necessity of abandoning-by dint of deducing all your ideas solely from the independence of the individual, you have arrivedwhere? In commerce at anarchy-that is to say, at the oppression of the weak, in politics at liberty—that is to say, at the dension of the weak who have neither means, time. nor knowledge to exercise their proper rights, in morals at egoism—that is to say, the isolation and the ruin of the weak who cannot help themselves alone. But we want Association, how is this to be accurely obtained except by brothers who believe in the same guiding principle, who are united in the same faith, who take the oath in the same name? We want education, how is this to be given or received except in virtue of a principle containing the expression of our common belief concerning the origin and the aim of man and of his life on this earth? We want a common education; how is this to be given or received, without a common faith? We want to form a nation, how can we succeed in this. unless we believe in a common purpose, in a common duty? And whence can we deduce a common duty if not from the idea which we form of God and of His relation to us? Doubtless universal suffrage is an excellent thing; it is the only legal means by which a country may govern itself without violent crises from time to time. But universal suffrage in a country dominated by one faith will give expression to the tendencies, to the will of the nation, while in a country lacking a common belief how can it express anything except the interests of those who are numerically strongest and the oppression of all the rest? All political reforms in countries without religion or indifferent to religion will last as long as it suits the caprice or the self-interest of individuals, and no longer. The expenence of the last fifty years has taught us enough on this point

To the others who speak to you of heaven, separating it from earth, you will say that heaven and earth, like the way and the end of the way, are one thing only Do not tell us that the earth is clay The earth' is God's. God created it that we might climb by it to The earth is not a sojourn of expiation and temptation, it is the place appointed for our labour of self-improvement, and of development towards a higher state of existence God created us not for contemplation, but for action, He created us in His own image, and He is Thought and Action-nay, in Him there is no thought which is not simultaneous action You say we ought to despise all worldly things, and sourn terrestrial life, so that we may concern ourselves only with the celestial But what is terrestrial life if not a prelude to the celestial, a step towards its attainment i Do you not perceive that blessing as you do the last step of the liadder by which we must all climb, and declaring the first unholy, you cut away our path from us? The life of a soul is sacred in every one of its stages, in the earthly stage as well as in the others which are to follow, so, then, every stage must be a preparation for the next, every temporary progress must help the continuous upward progress of the immortal life which God has kindled in each one of us, and in Careb of our liminarity which grows by the operation of

Now, God has placed you here below upon earth; He has surrounded you with millions of beings like vourselves, whose minds are nourished by your minds. whose improvement progresses with yours, whose life is fertilised by your life. To save you from the perils of isolation He has given you needs which you cannot satisfy by yourselves, and dominating social instincts which distinguish you from the brutes, in whom they remain dormant He has spread about you this world which you call material, magnificent in beauty, and pregnant with life, with a life which, you must never forget, reveals itself everywhere as God's visible token, but nevertheless awaits your work, depends in its manifestations upon you, and increases in power in proportion to the increase in your activity. He has placed within you inextinguishable sympathies, pity for those who mourn, joy with those who smile, wrath against those who oppress their fellow creatures, an incessant yearning for truth, admiration for the genius who discloses a portion of truth unknown before, enthusiasm for those who translate it into action profitable to all, religious veneration for those who, unable to make it triumph, die a martyr's death, bearing witness to it with their blood. Yet you deny, you scorn these indications of your mission lavished around you by God you even cry anathema upon His manifestations, bidding us concentrate all our powers upon a work of inward purification which must be imperfect, nay impossible, when carried on alone

Now, does not God punish those who strive to do this?

Is not the slave degraded? Is not half the soul of the poor day labourer suffocated in sensual appetites, in the blind instincts which you call material, so long as he is doomed to spend the divine life within him in a series of physical acts unenlightened by education? Do you find a more lively religious faith in the Russian serf than in the Pole fighting the battles of his country and liberty? Do you find a more fervent love of God in the degraded subject of a Pope and of a tyrant king than in the Lombard republican of the twelfth century and the Florentine republican of the fourteenth? Wheresoever the spirit of God is, there is liberty, has been said by one of the most powerful apostles that we know, and the religion which he preached decreed the abolition of slavery, for who can understand and adore God rightly while prostrate at the feet of God's creature? Yours is not a religion; it is a sect of men who have forgotten their origin, forgotten the battle which their fathers kept up against a rotten society, and the victories which they won, transforming this world which you, O men of contemplation, despise to-day Whatever earnest belief shall arise out of the ruins of the old worn-out creeds will transform the existing social order, because every earnest belief seeks to apply itself to all the branches of human activity. because the earth has always sought in every age to conform itself to the heaven in which it believed, because the whole story of Humanity repeats under diverse forms and in diverse degrees, varying according to the times, the saying written in the Christian prayer, Thy hingdom come on earth, O Lord, as it is in heaven.

Thy hingdom ome on earth art is in hances. Let these words, better inembered and better applied than in the past, be the utterance of your fath, your prayer, O my trothers. Repeat it, and act so that it may be fulfilled. Do not heed those who try to teach you passave resignation, indifference to earthly things, submission to every without understanding it this other saying, "Render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's and unto God the things which are God's" Can they tell you anything which is not God's? Nothing is Cæsar's except in so far as it is such in conformity with the divine law Cæsar -that is, the temporal power, the civil governmentis nothing but the mandatory, the executor, so far as its powers and the times allow, of God's design, whenever it betrays its mandate it is, I will not say your right, but your duty to change it. Why are you here below, if not to exert yourselves to work out the intention of God with the means you possess and in your own sphere? Why profess to believe in the unity of the human race. the necessary consequence of the unity of God, if you do not labour to realise it by combating the arbitrary divisions and the enmittee which still divide the various tribes composing Humanity? Why believe in human liberty, the basis of human responsibility, if we do not strive to destroy all the obstacles which impede the first and vitiate the second? Why speak of Biotherhood and yet allow our brothers every day to be trampled, degraded, despised? The earth is our field of labour, we may not curse it, we must sanctify it. The material forces which surround us are our instruments of labour, we may not reject them, we must use them for good

But this without God you cannot do I have spoken to you of duties, I have taught you that the mere knowledge of your rights is not enough to guide you permanently along the path of Progress, is not enough to give you that progressive continuous improvement in your conditions which you seek Now without God whence can we derive Duty? Without God, you will find that whatever system of civil government you choose to attach vourselves to has no other basis than blind. brutal, tyrannic Force There is no escape from this Either the development of human things depends upon a law of providence which we are all charged to discover and to apply, or it is entrusted to chance, to the circumstances of the moment and the man who knows best how to avail himself of them Either we ought to obey God, or to serve men-whether one or many matters not If there be not a Supreme Mind reigning over all human minds, who can save us from the tyranny of our fellow men, whenever they find themselves stronger than we? If there be not a holy and inviolable law, not created by men, what rule have we by which to judge whether an act is just or unjust? In the name of whom. in the name of what, shall we protest against oppression and meguality? Without God there is no other sovereign than Fact; Fact before which the materialists ever bow themselves, whether its name be Revolution or Buonaparte; Fact, which the materialists of to-day also, in Italy and everywhere, use as a justification for inactivity even when they agree in theory with our principles. Now, how shall we demand of them self-sacrifice, martyidom, in the name of our individual opinions? Shall we transform theory into practice and abstract principle into action, on the strength of our interests alone? Do not be deceived. As long as we speak as individuals in the name of whatever theory our individual intellect suggests to us, we shall have what we have to-day, adherence in words, not in deeds The cry which rang out in all the great revolutions-the cry of the Crusades, God wills it | God wills it |-alone can rouse the mert to action, give courage to the fearful, enthusiasm of self-sacrifice to the calculating, faith to those who reject with distrust all merely human ideas Prove to men that the work of emancipation and of progressive development to which you call them is part of God's design, and none will rebel Prove to them that the work which has to be accomplished here on earth is an essential portion of their immortal life, and all the calculations of the moment will vanish before the importance of the future Without God you can command, not persuade. you can be tyrants in your turn, never educators and apostles

God wills 1t—God wills 1t It is the cry of the People, O Brothers It is the cry of your People, the cry of the Italian Nation. Do not let yourselves be deceived, you who work with sincerity of love for your nation, by those who will perhaps tell you that the Italian genius is not a political genius, and that the religious spirit has departed from her. The religious spirit never departed from Italy as long as she remained. in spite of her divisions, great and active, but it departed from her in the sixteenth century, when Florence had fallen, and all the liberty of Italian life had been crushed by the foreign arms of Chailes V, and the deceit of the Popes, and we began to lose our national character, and to hve as if we were Spaniards, Germans, and French Then our learned men began to play the buffoon to princes, and to stimulate their listless patrons by laughing at everybody and everything Then our priests, seeing that any application of religious truth was impossible, began to traffic in holy things, and to think of themselves, not of the people whom they ought to have enlightened and protected. And then the people, despised by the learned, deceived and fleeced by the priests, banished from any influence in public matters, began to revenge themselves by deriding the learned, distrusting the priests, rebelling against all creeds, since they perceived that the old one was corrupt, and were not able to look beyond it. From that time forward we have dragged ourselves along, in abjectness and impotence, between the superstitions imposed upon us by habit. or by our governors, and incredulity But we want to rise again, great and honoured. And we will remember the national tradition. We will remember that, with the name of God on their lips, and with the symbols of their faith in the centre of the battle, our Lombard brothers in the twelfth century vanquished the German invaders. and reconquered the liberties wrested from them will remember that the republicans of the Tuscan cities held their parliaments in the churches. We will remember the Florentine artisans who refused to submit their democratic liberty to the domination of the House of Medici, and by solemn vote elected Christ as head of the republic, and the friar Savonarola preaching in the same breath faith in God and the rights of the people. and the Genoese of 1746, who, with stones for weapons, and in the name of the Virgin Mary, their patron saint, liberated their city from the German army which occupied it, and a whole chain of other deeds like these, in which the religious thought protected and fertilised the popular thought of Italy. And the religious sentiment sleeps in our people, wating to be awakened He who knows how to rouse it will do more for the nation than can be done by twenty political theories. Perhaps it is the lack of this sentiment in the imitations of the foreign monarchical constitutions and tactics who led the past attempts at insurrection in Italy, as much as the lack of an openly popular purpose, which is responsible for the coldness with which the people have till now regarded these attempts. Preach therefore, O Brothers, in the name of God. He who has an Italian heart will follow you.

Preach in the name of God The learned will stude, ask the learned what they have done for their country. The preasts will excommunicate you, say to the priests that you know God better than all of them together of and that between God and Jis law you have no need of any intermediary The people will understand you, and repeat with you We believe to God the Eather, who is Intelligence and Love, Creator and Teacher of Humanity And in this saying you and the People will conqueer

THE LAW

Vou live you have therefore a law of life There is no life without a law Whatever evists, exists in a certain manner, according to certain conditions, and under a certain law A law of aggregation governs minerals, a law of growth governs plants, a law of motion governs the stars, a law governs you and your life, a law as much nobler and more lofty than these, as you yourselves are higher than all other created things on earth To develop yourselves, to act, to live according to your law, is your first, nay, your only Duty

God gave you life God therefore gave you the law. God is the only Law-Giver to the human race. His law is the only law which you are obliged to obey. Human laws are only valid and good in so far as they conform to His law, explaining and applying it 'they are bad whenever they contract or disregard it, and it is then not only your right, but your duty, to disobey them and abolish them. He who best explains God's law and applies it to human occasions is your legitimate head 'love' him and follow him. But you have not, and cannot have, any master but God, without being false and rebellious to Him.

In the knowledge of your law of life, of the law of God, lies, then, the foundation of Morality, the rule of your actions and of your duties, the measure of your responsibilities, that, too, is your defence against the unjust law which the arbitrary will of one man, or of many men, may strive to impose upon you. Without knowing this law you cannot pretend to the name or right of men. "All rights have their origin in a law, and as long as you.

are unable to invoke it you may be tyrants or slaves but nothing else, tyrants, if you are strong, slaves of the strong if you are weak. To be men you must know the law which distinguishes human nature from that o brutes, plants, minerals, and you must conform you octions to it.

Now, how are you to know it?

This is the question which Humanity in all time haaddressed to those who have pronounced the work

duty · and to-day still the answers are different

Some have answered by showing a code or a book and saying, Within this st contained the whole moral law Others have said, Let every man interrogate his own leart, there he will find the definition of good and of end Others, again, rejecting the judgment of the individual have invoked universal opinion and declared that wher Elimantity agrees in a belief, that belief is the true one

All are wrong. And the history of the human race has proved by numpeachable facts the impotence of all these answers. Those who affirm that the whole moral away is to be found in a book, or in the utterances of s single man, forget that there is no code which Humanity after believing in it for centuries, has not abandoned in order to seek and preach a better one, and that there is no reason to believe, especially to-day, that Humanity will change its way of proceeding.

Those who maintain that the conscience of the ineits dual alone is the criterion of the true and the false, that is, of good and evil, need only remember that no religion however holy, has ever existed without heretics, without dissenters by conviction, ready to face martyridom at the name of their conscience. Protestainstin to-day a divided and subdivided into a thousand sects, all cage to make war upon each other, and perpetuating that anarchy of belief which is the true and only source or the social and political discord now tormenting the peoples of Europe And on the other hand, the mer who reject the testimony of the individual conscience, and appeal only to the common belief of Humanity, must remember that all the great ideas which have helped the progress of Humanity began by being opposed to the general beliefs of Humanity, and were preached by individuals whom Humanity derided, persecuted, and crucified

Crucined Each of these rules, then, is insufficient to obtain for us a knowledge of the law of God, of Truth Yet, nevertheless, the individual conscience is sacred; the general opmion of Humanity is sacred, and wheever refuses to interogate either the one or the other deprives himself of an essential means of knowing the truth. The common error till now has been the desire to reach the truth by one of these means exclusively, an error most fatal and decisive in its consequences, because the conscience of the individual cannot be set up as the only criterion of truth without falling into anarchy, nor can the general opinion of Humanity be moveded at any given moment as a rule from which there is no appeal, without suffocating human liberty and plunging headlong, into tyranny and plunging Readous; mito vyraming. Thus—and I give these examples to show that upon these primary foundations the whole social edifice rests, more than is generally supposed—thus men, falling into the same error, have organised political society, some soldy on respect for the rights of the manufact, forgetting altogether the educational mission of society, others solely upon soxad rights, searfining the liberty and action of the individual. And France, after her great revolution, and England conspicuously, have taught us how the first system leads only to inequality and oppression of the many. Communism, if ever it could become established fact, would show us, among other things, how the second condemns society to petification by depriving it of all mobility and faculty of progress.

Thus some, considering only the so-called rights of the individual, have organised, or rather disorganised, the 1 Iam naturally speaking of countries where under a system of constitutional monarchy a certain organisation of society has been attempted the rights of individuals are requiry ascribed. economic system by founding it solely upon the theory of unlimited freedom of competition, whilst the others, thinking only of social unity, would confide the monopoly of all the productive forces of the State to the Government, of these two theories, the first has given us all the evils of anarchy, the second would lead to immobility and all the evils of transp.

God has given you the general opinion of your fellowmen, and your own conscience, to be to you two wings with which to soar towards Him Why should you insist on cutting off one of them? Why should you isolate yourselves, or let the world absorb you altogether? Why should you want to suffocate the voice of the individual or of the human race? Both are sacred, God speaks in both. Whenever they agree, whenever the cry of your conscience is rathfied by the general consent of Humanity, there is God, there you are sure of having the truth in your grasp, the one is the verification of the other.

If your duties were merely negative, if they consisted solely in not doing evil, in not harming your fellow-man, perhaps in the state of development which even the least educated have reached to-day the voice of your conscience would be enough to guide you. You are born for good, and every time that you act directly contrary to the Law, every time that you commit what men call crime, there is something in you which accuses you, some voice of reproof which you can conceal from others, but not from yourselves But your most important duties are positive. It is not enough not to do, you must do It is not enough to content yourselves with not acting contrary to the law, you must act according to the law. It is not enough not to do harm, you must do good to your brothers. Hitherto morality has too often presented itself to the majority of men in a form rather negative than affirmative. The interpreters of the Law have said. "Thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not steal". few or none have taught them the obligations which belong to them as men, and in what way they ought to do good to their fellows and turther God's design in creation.

Now, this is the chief aim of morality, and no individual, by consulting his own conscience only, may ever attain it

The conscience of the individual speaks in accordance with his education, his tendencies, his habits, his passions The conscience of the savage Iroquois speaks a language different from that of the civilised European of the nineteenth century. The conscience of the free man suggests to him duties which the conscience of the slave does not even suspect Ask the poor Neapolitan or Lombard daylabourer, whose only teacher of morality has been a bad priest and to whom the only book allowed, if indeed he knows how to read, is the Austrian catechism, he will tell you that his duties are to labour industriously for any wage he can obtain in order to support his family, to submit himself blindly to the laws whatever they may be. and to do no harm to others Should you speak to him of duties which bind him to his country and to humanity : should you say to him, "You do harm to your fellowmen by consenting to work for a wage less than the value of your work, and you sin against God and against your own soul by obeying laws which are unjust," he would answer like one who does not understand, lifting his brows in bewilderment. Ask the Italian workingman whom better circumstances or contact with men of more highly educated minds have taught a part of the truth, he will tell you that his country is enslayed, that his brothers are unjustly condemned to live in material and moral wretchedness, and that he feels it his duty to protest as far as he is able against this imustice much divergence between the promptings of conscience in two individuals of the same time and the same country? Why among ten individuals holding substantially the same creed, that which emoins the development and the progress of the human race, do we find ten different convictions as to the manner of reducing belief to actionthat is to say, as to their duties? Evidently the voice of the individual conscience is not enough in all conditions of things, and without any other guide, to reveal the law to us. Conscience can only teach us that the law exists, not the nature of the duties which it imposes For this reason marrydom has never been absent from among men, however much egoism may have prevailed, but how many martyrs have sacrificed existence for imaginary duties, for the sake of errors patent to everybody to-day?

Your conscience has need, then, of a guide, of a light, to penetrate the darkness around it, of a rule by which to confirm and direct its instincts. And this rule is

Intellect and Humanity

God has given intellect to each of you that you may educate it to know His law To-day poverty, the rooted errors of centuries, and the will of your masters withhold from you even the possibility of educating it, and for this reason it is necessary for you to overthrow those " obstacles by force But even when those obstacles are removed your individual intellect will not be enough to teach you the law of God, if it is not supported by the intellect of Humanity Your life is short, your individual faculties are weak, uncertain, and need a support Now. God has placed beside you a Being whose life is continuous, whose faculties are the sum of all the individual faculties that have been exercised for perhaps four hundred centuries, a being which amid the errors and the faults of individuals ever advances in wisdom and morality, a being in whose development God has written and writes in every epoch a line of His law

This Being is Humanity

Humanity, as a thinker of the last century has said, us a man who is always learning. Individuals die, but that much of truth which they have revealed, that much of good which they have done, is not lost with them, Humanity treasures it up and the men who walk over their graver recap the benefit of it. Every one of us is born to-day in an atmosphere of ideas and of beliefs elaborated by the whole of bygone Humanity, and each of us brings, even without knowing it, a more or less important element to the life of Humanity to come The education of Humanity progresses as those pyramds in the East irse, to which every passer-by adds a stone

We pass, the wayfarers of a day, called to complete our individual education elsewhere; the education of Humanity shows itself only by flashes in each of us, but is revealed slowly and progressively, continuously, in Humanity is the lawney more of God The spirit of God makes it fruitful and is manifested in it from age to age ever more pure, ever more active, now by means of an individual, now by means of a people From labour to labour, from belief to belief, Humanity goes on gradually acquiring a clearer perception of its own life, of its own misson, of God and of His law

God incarnates Himself successively in Humanity The law of God is one, as God is one, but we only discover it article by article, line by line, as the educative experience of preceding generations accumulates more and more and the association of races, peoples, and individuals grows in extent and closeness No man, no people, no century can presume to have discovered the whole of it, the moral law, the law of life of Humanity, can only be discovered in its entirety by the whole of Humanity united in association, when all the powers, all the faculties which constitute human nature shall be developed and in action. But meanwhile that part of Humanity which is most advanced in education teaches us by its development a part of the law which we seek In its history we read the design of God, in its needs our duties; duties which change, or rather arise, with those needs, because our first duty is to co-operate in lifting Humanity to that degree of improvement and of education for which God and the times have prepared it. Therefore, to know the law of God you must in-terrogate not only your own conscence but the conscence, the general conviction, of Humanity Morality is progressive, like the education of the human race and your education is. The morality of our century is not that of Pagan times, the morality of our century is not that of eighteen centuries ago. To-day, your masters, by separating you from the other classes, by prohibiting all association, by imposing a double censoiship upon the press, endeavour to conceal from you your duties, together with the needs of Humanity And nevertheless. even before the time comes when the nation will teach you gratuitously in schools of general education the history of Humanity in the past, and its needs in the present, you will be able, if you wish it, to learn the first, in part at least, and to divine the second. The actual needs of Humanity are expressed more or less violently. more or less imperfectly, in the events which occur every day in countries where the immobility of silence is not an absolute law Who prevents you, our brothers of the enslayed lands, from knowing them? What power of suspicious tyranny can withhold the knowledge of European events for long from the millions of men in Italy, very many of whom travel in other countries? If public associations are forbidden almost everywhere in Italy, who can prevent secret ones, if they avoid outward tokens and complicated organisations, and only consist of a fraternal chain, stretching from town to town until it touches one of the numberless points of the frontier? Do you not find at every point of the land and maritime frontier your own friends and countrymen, men whom your masters have driven out of the country because they wanted to help you, men who will be apostles of truth to you, and tell you out of their love for you that which their studies and the sad opportunities of exile have taught them concerning the tradition of Humanity and its aspirations in the present day? Who can prevent you from receiving any of the writings which your brothers print there in exile for you, if only you wish it vourselves? Read them and burn them, so that next day the inquisitors, sent by your masters, may not find them in your hands, and make them a cause of accusation against your family Aid us with your offerings to enlarge the sphere of our mission, and to compile and print for you manuals of general history, and of the history of your country. Help us, by multiplying ways of , communication, to circulate them more widely. Be assured that without instruction you cannot know your duties, and that when society does not allow you to be taught, the responsibility for every offence rests not with you, but with it, your responsibility begins on the day when an opportunity of instruction is offered to you and you neglect it, on the day when means are presented to you of transforming a society which condemns you to ignorance, and you do not exert yourselves to use them You are not guilty because you are ignorant; you are guilty because you resign yourselves to be ignorant. because, though your conscience warns you that God has not given you faculties without imposing upon you the duty of developing them, you allow the faculty of thinking to sleep in your soul, because though you know also that God would not have given you a love of truth without giving you the means of following it, you give up a the search for it in despair and accept unquestioningly as truth the assertions of the powers that be, and of the priest who has sold himself to those powers

DUTIES TO HUMANITY

Your first duties, first not in point of time but of importance-because without understanding these you can only imperfectly fulfil the rest-are to Humanity You have duties as citizens, as sons, as husbands, as fathers—sacred, inviolable duties of which I shall presently speak at length, but what makes these duties sacred and inviolable is the mission, the duty, which your nature as men imposes on you You are fathers in order that you may educate men to worship and to unfold God's law. You are citizens, you have a country, in order that in a limited sphere, with the concourse of people linked to you already by speech, by tendencies, and by habits, you may labour for the benefit of all men whatever they are and may be in the future-a task which each one could ill do by himself, weak and lost amid the immense multitude of his fellow-men. Those who teach morality, limiting its obligations to duties towards family or country, teach you a more or less narrow egoism and lead you to what is evil for others and for yourselves Country and family are like two circles drawn within a greater circle which contains them both like two steps of a ladder without which you could not climb any higher, but upon which it is forbidden! you to stay your feet

You are men, that is, rational and social creatures capable, by means of association only, of a progress to which no one may assign limits, and this is all that we know to-day of the law of life given to Humannty to the characteristics constitute human nature, which distinguishes you from the other beings around you and

The Duties of Man 42 which is entrusted to each of you as a seed to bring to fruit All your life should tend to the exercise and the regular development of these fundamental faculties of your nature Whenever you suppress one of these faculties or allow it to be suppressed wholly or in part, you fall from the rank of men to the level of the inferior animals and violate the law of your life, the Law of God.

You fall to the level of the brutes and violate God's Law whenever you suppress, or allow to be suppressed, one of the faculties which constitute human nature in

'What He wills is that the Idea of perfectibility and of love which He has given to the world should reveal itself in ever-increasing glory, ever more adored and better manifested Your earthly and individual existence within its narrow limits of time and of capacity can only manifest it most imperfectly and by flashes Humanity alone, continuous through the generations and through the general intellect fed by the individual intellect of each of its members, can gradually unfold that divine idea and apply or glorify it Life, then, was given you by God that you might use it for the benefit of humanity, that you might direct your individual faculties to the development of the faculties of your fellow-men. and that you might contribute by your work some portion to that collective work of improvement and that discovery of the truth which the generations slowly but continuously carry on You must educate yourselves and educate others, perfect yourselves and perfect others God is in you, without doubt, but God is likewise in all the men who people this earth; God is in the life of all the generations which were, which are, and which are to be, and which have progressively improved. and will continue to improve, the conception formed by Humanity of Him, of His Law, and of our Duties.

yourself or in others What God wills is not only that his Law should be fulfilled in you as individuals—had He willed this only, He would have created you solitary -but that it should be fulfilled in the whole earth, among all the beings whom He created in His own image.

You must adore Him and glorify Him wheresoever He is The universe is His temple, And every unresisted and unexpiated profanation of God's temple is visited upon all the believers It is of little avail that you can call yourselves pure, even could you by isolating yourselves keep your purity, you are still false to your duty if you have corruption two steps off and do not strive against it. It is of little avail that you worship the truth in your hearts, if error rules your brothers in some other corner of this earth, which is our common mother, and you do not desire, and endeavour as far as lies in your power, to overthrow it, you are false to your duty The image of God is defaced in the immortal souls of your fellowmen God wills that we should adore Him in His Law, and His Law is misinterpreted, violated, denied all around you Human nature is false to itself in millions of men to whom, as to you, God has entrusted the concordant fulfilment of His design And you, while you remain inactive, do you dare to call yourselves believers? e

A people, Greek, Polish, Circassian, raises the banner of the Fatherland and of Independence, fights, conquers, or dies for it. What is it that makes your hearts beat at the story of its battles, which makes them swell with joy at its victories, and sorrow over its defeats? A mapperhape your fellow-countryman, perhaps a foreigner, rises amen the universal silence, in some corner of the earth, gives utterance to certain indeas which he believes to be tree, maintained them they may be a foreigner, rises amen them them they have been to be tree, maintained them they have been described by do you know that them they have been the scaffold. Why do you know the heart of Saint and of Marity? Why do you respect and teach your children to respect his memory?

And why do you eagerly read the miracles of patrotice love recorded in Groek story, and repeat them to your children with a feeling of pride, almost as if they were stories of your own fathers? These deeds of the Greeks are two thousand years old, and belong to an epoch of civilisation which is not and never can be yours. That man whom you call martly deed perhaps for ideas which

you do not hold, and anyhow by his voluntary death he cut short his individual progress here below. That neonle whom you admire in victory and in defeat is a people foreign and perhaps almost unknown to you. speaking a different language, and with a manner of life which has no visible influence upon yours, what matters it to you whether it is dominated by the Sultan or the King of Bavaria, by the Russian Czar or by a government springing from the common will of the nation? But in your heart a voice cries, "Those men of two thousand years ago, those far-off peoples that fight to-day, that martyr to ideas for which you would not die, were and are your brothers brothers not only by community of origin and nature, but community of work and of purpose Those ancient Greeks passed away. but their work did not pass away, and without it you would not possess to-day that degree of intellectual and moral development which you have reached Those peoples consecrate with their blood an idea of national liberty for which you too are fighting. That martyr proclaimed by his death that man must sacrifice all things, and if needs be life also, for that which he believes to be the Truth. It is of little importance that he and all who seal their faith with their blood cut short their own individual development here upon earth. God provides elsewhere for them. But the development of Humanity is of importance. It is of importance that the coming generation, taught by your combats and your sacrifices, should rise higher and grow mightier than you in the understanding of the Law. in the adoration of the Truth It is of importance that human nature, fortified by example, should become better, and realise more and more God's will upon earth And wherever human nature grows better. wherever a new truth is won, wherever a step forward is taken on the path of education, of progress, and of morality, it is a step, a gain, which will bear fruit sooner. or later for the whole of Humanity You are all soldiers of an army which moves by diverse ways, divided into different bands, to the conquest of a single enterprise

At present you only look to your immediate leaders, and different uniforms, different words of command, the distances which separate the operating corps, the mountains which conceal them from one another, make you often forget this truth, and fix your attention exclusively upon the end which is closest to you. But there is One above you all who sees the whole and directs all the movements. VGod alone has the secret of the battle, and will be able to gather you all together into one came and under one banner.

How great the distance between this belief which stirs in our souls and which will be the basis of the morality of the enoch now about to open, and the faith which formed the basis of morality for the generation which we to-day call ancient! And how close is the bond between the idea which we form of the Divine Government and that which we form of our duties! The first men felt God, but without comprehending Him, without even seeking to comprehend Him in His Law, they felt Him in His might, not in His love, they had a confused conception of some sort of relation between Him and the individual, but nothing more. Little able to detach themselves from the sphere of objects perceptible to the senses, they embodied Him in one of these—in the tree which they had seen struck by the thunderbolt, in the rock beside which they had raised their tent, in the animal which first presented itself to their eyes. This was the worship wnich is called in the history of religion fetichism And at that time men knew of no bond except the family. the reproduction in a certain sense of their own individuality, beyond the circle of the family there were none but strangers, or more usually, enemies, to preserve themselves and their family was the sole foundation of morality. In later days the idea of God was expanded From objects of sense man rose timidly to the conception of abstractions, he generalised God was no longer the protector of the family only, but of the association of many families, of cities, of peoples To fetichism succeeded polytheism, the worship of many gods morality also enlarged its sphere of action. Men recognised the existence of more extended duties than those of the family, and laboured for the increase of the race, of the nation Yet nevertheless Humanity was ignored Every nation called foreigners barbarians, treated them as such, and sought by force or by fraud to conquer or to oppress them Every nation had foreigners or barbarians in its midst, men, millions of men, not admitted to the religious rites of the citizens, and looked upon as of different nature, slaves among the free. The unity of the human race could only be admitted as the consequence of the unity of God. And the unity of God, divined by a few rare thinkers of antiquity, and loudly proclaimed by Moses (but with the fatal restriction that a single people were God's elect) was not recognised until towards the dissolution of the Roman Empire, through the work of Christianity Foremost in his teaching Christ. places these two inseparable truths there is one God only, all men are the sons of God, and the promulgation of these two truths changed the aspect of the world and enlarged the moral circle to the confines of the inhabited To the duties of man to his family and to his Country they added duties to Humanity. Then man learnt that wherever he found a fellow man, there was a brother for him, a brother endowed with a soul immortal as his own, called to ascend to its Creator, a brother to whom he owed love, participation in his faith and the help of counsel and of deed when needed Then upon the lips of the Apostles were heard sublime words, prophetic of other truths contained in germ in Christianity. words unintelligible to antiquity, and ill understood or disregarded by the successors of the Apostles. For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office, so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another 1 And there shall be one fold and one shepherd 2 And now, after eighteen centuries of study and experience and toil, the time has come for the development of these germs, for the application of these truths not only to every individual, out to that whole sum of human faculties and powers, past and present, which is called Humanity, for the promulgation of the truth not only that Humanity is a angle body and ought to be governed by a single Law, but that the first article of this Law is Progress. progress here upon earth, where we have to accomplish God's design as much as in us hes, and to educate ourselves for better destinies. The time has come to teach men that, as Humanity is a single body, we are all of us, as members of that body, bound to work for its development, and to make its life more harmonious, active, and strong. The time is come to convince ourselves that we can only rise to God through the souls of our fellow-men, and that we ought to improve and purify them even when they do not ask it of us themselves The time has come, since that portion of God's design which He wills should be fulfilled here below can only be fulfilled by entire Humanity, to substitute for the exercise of charity towards individuals a work of association, aiming at the improvement of the whole, and to organise for this purpose the Family and the Country

Other and vaster duties will reveal themselves to us in the future, as we gradually acquire a clearer and less imperfect idea of our law of life Thus God the Father, by means of a slow but continuous religious education, guides Humanity to better things, and in this improvement each individual improves also.

We improve with the improvement of Humanity, nor without the improvement of the whole can you hope that your own moral and material conditions will improve. Generally speaking, you cannot, even if you would, separate you life from that of Humanity; you live in it, by it, for it. Your souls, with the exception of the very few men of exceptional power, cannot free themselves from the influence of the elements amid which they exist, just as the body, however robust its constitution, cannot escape from the effects of corrupt air around it. How many of you have the strength of mind to bung up your sons to be wholly trutfinl, knowing that you are sending them forth to persecution in a country where tyrants and spies bid them conceal or deny two-thirds of their real opinions? How many of you resolve to educate them to despise wealth in a society where gold is the only power which obtains honours, influence, and respect, where indeed it is the only protection from the tyranny and insults of the powerful and their agents? Who is there among you who in pure love and with the best intentions in the world has not murmured to his dear ones in Italy, Do not trust men; the honest man should retire into himself and fly from public life, charity begins at home.-and such-like maxims, plainly immoral, but prompted by the general state of society? What mother is there among you who, although she belongs to a faith: which adores the cross of Christ, the voluntary martyr for humanity, has not flung her arms around her son's neck and striven to dissuade him from perilous attempts to benefit his brothers? And even if you had strength to teach the contrary, would not the whole of society, with its thousand voices, its thousand evil examples, destroy the effect of your words? Can you purify, elevate your own souls in an atmosphere of contamination and degradation?

And, to descend to your material conditions, do you think they can be lastingly ameliorated by anything but the amelioration of all? Millions of pounds are spent annually here in England, where I write, by private charity, for the relief of individuals who have fallen into want; yet want increases here every year, and charity to individuals has proved powerless to heal the evil, and the necessity of collective organic remedies is more and more universally felt When a country, in consequence of the unjust laws which govern it, is continually threatened with a violent struggle between oppressors and oppressed. do you suppose that there can be a flow of capital in it copious enough for vast, lengthy, and costly enterprises? Where taxes and restrictions can be imposed at the ' caprice of a despotic Government, the cost of whose armies, spies, agents, and pensioners grows with the increasing necessity of securing itself against overthrow. do you suppose that industries and manufactures can have any activity or continuous development? Deyou answer that it is enough for you to organise better the government and the social conditions of your own country? It is not enough | No people lives to day exclusively on its own produce, you live by exchange, by importation and exportation An impoverished foreign nation, in which the number of consumers diminishes, is one market the less for you A foreign commerce upon which a bad administration brings crises or ruin, produces crises and ruin in yours. The failures of England and of America bring about Italian Credit nowadays is not a national but a European institution. Moreover, in any attempt at national reform you will have all the Governments hostile to you, in consequence of the alhances contracted between princes, who are the first to recognise that the social question is a general one in the present day There is no hope for you except in universal reform and in the brotherhood of all the peoples of Europe. and through Europe of all humanity I charge you then, O my brothers, by your duty and by your own interest, not to forget that your first duties-duties without fulfilling which you cannot hope to fulfil those owed to family and country-are to Humanity. Let your words and your actions be for all, since God is for all, in His Love and in His Law In whatever land you. may be, wherever a man is fighting for right, for justice, for truth, there is your brother, wherever a man suffers through the oppression of error, of injustice, of tyranny, there is your brother Free men and slaves. YOU ARE ALL BROTHERS Origin, law, and goal are one for all of you Let your creed, your action, the banner beneath which you fight, be likewise one Do not sav. The language which we speak is different, tears, actions, martyrdom form a common language for all men, and one which you all understand Do not say, Humanity is ? too vast, and we are too weak God does not measure powers, but intentions Love Humanity Ask yourselves whenever you do an action in the sphere of your Country, or your family, If what I am doing were done by all and for all, would it advantage or injure Humanity? and if your conscience answers, It would injure Humanity, desist, desist, even if it seem to you that an immediate advantage for your Country or your family would ensue from your action Be apostles of this faith, apostles of the brotherhood of nations, and of the unity of the human race-a principle admitted to-day in theory, but denied in practice Be such apostles wherever and in whatever way you are able Neither God nor man can demand more of you But I say to you that by becoming such apostles-even to yourselves only, when you are not able to do moreyou will advantage Humanity God measures the degrees of education which he allows the human race to ascend by the number and the purity of the believers. When you are pure and numerous, God, who numbers you, will open for you the way to action

DUTIES TO COUNTRY

Your first Duties—first, at least, in importance—are, as I have told you, to Humaniy You are more before you are attisens or fathers. If you do not embrace the whole human family in your love, if you do not confess your fath in its unity—consequent on the unity of God—and in the brotherhood of the Peoples who are appointed to reduce that unity to fact—if wherever one of your fellowmen groans, wherever the dignity of human nature is violated by falsshood or tyranny, you are not prompt, being able, to succour that wetched one, or do not feel yourself called, being able, to fight for the purpose of releving the deceived or oppressed—you dasobey your law of life, or do not comprehend the religion which will besset the future.

But what can each of you, with his stolated powers, do for the moral improvement, for the progress of Humanity? You can, from time to time, give stenle expression to your belief, you may, on some rare occasion, perform an act of charry to a brother not belonging to your own land, no more. Now, charry, is not the watchword of the future faith. The watchies of the watchword of the future faith association, firsternal co-operation towards a common aim, and this is as much superior to charry as the work of many unting to raise with one accord a building for the habitation of all together would be superior to that which you would accomplish by raising a separate hut each for himself, and only helping one another by exchanging stones and bricks and mortar. But divided as you are in language, tendencies, labits, and capacieus, you cannot attempt this common work The individual is too weak, and Humanity too vast My God, prays the Breton mariner as he puts out to sea, protect me, my ship is so little, and Thy ocean so great / And this prayer sums up the condition of each of you, if no means is found of multiplying your forces and your powers of action indefinitely But God gave you this means when he gave you a Country, when, like a wise overseer of labour, who distributes the different parts of the work according to the capacity of the workmen, he divided Humanity into distinct groups upon the face of our globe, and thus planted the seeds of nations Bad governments have disfigured the design i of God, which you may see clearly marked out, as far, at. least, as regards Europe, by the courses of the great rivers, by the lines of the lofty mountains, and by other geographical conditions, they have disfigured it by conquest, by greed, by jealousy of the just sovereignty of others, disfigured it so much that to day there is perhaps no nation except England and France whose confines correspond to this design They did not, and they do not, recognise any country except their own families and dynasties, the egoism of caste But the divine design will infallibly be fulfilled divisions, the innate spontaneous tendencies of the peoples will replace the arbitrary divisions sanctioned by bad governments The map of Europe will be remade The Countries of the People will rise, defined by the voice of the free, upon the ruins of the Countries of Kings and privileged castes Between these Countries there-will be harmony and brotherhood And then the work of Humanity for the general amelioration, for the discovery and application of the real law of life, carried on in association and distributed according to local capacities, will be accomplished by peaceful and progressive development, then each of you, strong in the affections and in the aid of many millions of men speaking the same language, endowed with the same tendencies, and educated by the same historic tradition. may hope by your personal effort to benefit the whole of Humanity.

To you, who have been born in Italy, God has allotted, as if favouring you specially, the best defined country in Europe In other lands, marked by more uncertain or more interrupted limits, questions may arise which the pacific vote of all will one day solve, but which have cost, and will yet perhaps cost, tears and blood, in God has stretched round you sublime vours, no and indisputable boundaries, on one side the highest mountains of Europe, the Alps, on the other the sea, the immeasurable sea Take a map of Europe and place one point of a pair of compasses in the north of Italy on Parma, point the other to the mouth of the Var. and describe a semicircle with it in the direction of the Alps , this point, which will fall, when the semicircle is completed, upon the mouth of the Isonzo, will have marked the frontier which God has given you. As far as this frontier your language is spoken and understood, beyond this you have no rights. Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica, and the smaller islands between them and the mainland of Italy belong undeniably to you Brute force may for a little while contest these frontiers with you, but they have been recognised from of old by the tacit general consent of the peoples; and the day when, rising with oneaccord for the final trial, you plant your tricoloured flag upon that frontier, the whole of Europe will acclaim re-risen Italy, and receive her into the community of the nations. To this final trial all your efforts must be directed

Without Country you have neither name, token, voice, nor rights, no admission as bothers into the fellowship of the Peoples. You are the bastards of Humanity Soldiers without a banner, Israelites among the nations, you will find neither faith nor protection, none will be surfets for you. Do not begule yourselves with the hope of emancipation from unjust social condutions if you do not first conquer a Country for yourselves; where there is no Country there is no common agreement to which you can appeal, the egoism of self-interest rules alone, and he who has the upper band keeps it, since there is no common sifeguard for the interests of all. Do not be led away by the idea of improving your material conditions without first solving the national question. You cannot do it. Your industrial associations and mutual help societies are useful as a means of educating and disciplining yourselves; as an economic fact they will remain barren until you have an Italy. The economic problem demands, first and foremost, an increase of capital and production, and while your Country is dismembered into separate fragments-while shut off by the barner of customs and artificial difficulties of every sort, you have only restricted markets open to you-you cannot hope for this increase To day -do not delude yourselves-you are not the workingclass of Italy, you are only fractions of that class. powerless, unequal to the great task which you propose to yourselves Your emancipation can have no practical beginning until a National Government, understanding the signs of the times, shall, seated in Rome, formulate a Declaration of Principles to be the guide for Italian progress, and shall insert into it these words, Labour is sacred, and is the source of the wealth of Italy.

Do not be led astray, then, by hopes of material progress which in your present conditions can only be illusions Your Country alone, the vast and rich Italian Country, which stretches from the Alps to the farthest limit of Sicily, can fulfil these hopes. You cannot obtain your rights except by obeying the commands of Duty. Be worthy of them, and you will have them O my Brothers | love your Country | TOur Country is our home, the home which God has given us, placing therein a numerous family which we love and are loved by, and with which we have a more intimate and quicker communion of feeling and thought than with others, a family which by its concentration upon a given spot, and by the homogeneous nature of its elements, is destined for a special kind of activity. Our Country is our field of labour; the products of our activity must go forth from it for the benefit of the whole earth, but the instruments of labour which we can use best and most effectively exist in it, and we may not reject them without being unfaithful to God's purpose and dimunsisting our own strength. In labouring according to true principles for our Country we are labouring for Humanity,/ our Country is the fulcrum of the lever which we have to wield for the common good If we give up this fulcrum we run the risk of becoming useless to our Country and to Humanity. Before associating ourselves with the country of the country of the country of the sanday of the country of the country of the country of the among equals, and you have no recognised collective consideration.

Humanity is a great army moving to the conquest of unknown lands, against powerful and wary enemies The Peoples are the different corps and divisions of that army Each has a post entrusted to it : each a special operation to perform, and the common victory depends on the exactness with which the different operations are carried out. Do not disturb the order of the battle. Do not abandon the banner which God has given you Wherever you may be, into the midst of whatever people circumstances may have driven you, fight for the liberty of that people if the moment calls for it . but fight as Italians, so that the blood which you shed may win honour and love, not for you only, but for your Country And may the constant thought of your soul be for Italy. may all the acts of your life be worthy of her, and may the standard beneath which you range yourselves to work for Humanity he Italy's. Do not say I, say we Be every one of you an incarnation of your Country, and feel himself and make himself responsible for his fellow-countrymen, let each one of you learn to act in such a way that in him men shall respect and love his Country

Nour Country is one and indivisible. As the members of a family cannot rejoice at the common table if one of their number is far away, snatched from the affection of his brothers, so you should have no joy or repose as long as portion of the territory upon which your language is spoken is separated from the Nation.

Your Country is the token of the mission which God

thas given you to fulfil in Humanity The faculties, the strength of all its sons should be united for the accomplishment of this mission A certain number of common duties and rights belong to every man who answers to the Who are you? of the other peoples, I am an Italian Those duties and those rights cannot be represented except by one single authority resulting from your votes A Country must have, then, a single; government. The politicians who call themselves federalists, and who would make Italy into a brotherhood of different states, would dismember the Country, not understanding the idea of Unity The States into which Italy is divided to-day are not the creation of our own people, they are the result of the ambitions and calculations of princes or of foreign conquerors. , and serve no purpose but to flatter the vanity of local aristocracies for which a narrower sphere than a great Country is necessary What you, the people, have created, beautified, and consecrated with your affections. with your joys, with your sorrows, and with your blood. is the City and the Commune, not the Province or the State In the City, in the Commune, where your fathers sleep and where your children will live, where you exercise your faculties and your personal rights, you live out your lives as andividuals It is of your City that each of you can say what the Venetians say of theirs. Venezia la xe nostra l'avemo fatta nu! In your City you have need of liberty as in your Country you have need of association The Liberty of the Commune and the Unity of the Country-let that, then, be your faith Do not say Rome and Tuscany, Rome and Lombardy, Rome and Sicily, say Rome and Florence, Rome and Siena, Rome and Leghorn, and so through all the Communes of Italy. Rome for all that represents Italian life : your Commune for whatever represents the individual life All the other divisions are artificial, and are not confirmed by your national tradition

A Country is a fellowship of free and equal men bound together in a brotherly concord of labour towards a single

Venice is our own we have made ber.

nd. You must make it and maintain it such A Country is not an aggregation, it is an association There no true Country without a uniform right. There is o true Country where the uniformity of that right violated by the existence of caste, privilege, and nequality-where the powers and faculties of a large umber of individuals are suppressed or dormant-where here is no common principle accepted, recognised, and leveloped by all In such a state of things there can be o Nation, no People, but only a multitude, a fortintous gglomeration of men whom circumstances have brought ogether and different circumstances will separate] In he name of your love for your Country you must ombat without truce the existence of every privilege. very inequality, upon the soil which has given you birth one privilege only is lawful-the privilege of Genius then Genius reveals itself in brotherhood with Virtue but it is a privilege conceded by God and not by men. nd when you acknowledge it and follow its inspirations, on acknowledge it freely by the exercise of your own eason and your own choice. Whatever privilege claims our submission in virtue of force or heredity, or any ight which is not a common right, is a usurpation and tyranny, and you ought to combat it and annihilate t Your Country should be your Temple God at the! iummit, a People of equals at the base. Do not accept any other formula, any other moral law, if you do not want to dishonour your Country and yourselves Let the secondary laws for the gradual regulation of your existence be the progressive application of this supreme

And in order that they should be so, it is necessary that all should contribute to the making of them. The, ians made by one fraction of the citizens only can never by the nature of things and men do otherwise than reflect the thoughts and aspirations and desires of that fraction, they represent, not the whole country, but a third, a fourth part, a class, a zone of the country. The law must express the general aspiration, promote the good of all, respond to a beat of the nation's heart. The whole is the country of the country nation therefore should be, directly or indirectly, the t legislator. By yielding this mission to a few men. you put the egoism of one class in the place of the Country.

which is the union of all the classes. A Country is not a mere territory; the particular territory is only its foundation The Country is the idea which rises upon that foundation, it is the sentiment of love the sense of fellowship which hinds together all the sons of that territory. So long as a single one of your brothers is not represented by his own vote in the development of the national life-so long as a single one vegetates uneducated among the educated-so long as a single one able and willing to work languishes in poverty for want of work-you have not got a Country such as it not rest until your hands have solidly erected them.

ought to be, the Country of all and for all Votes, education, work are the three main pillars of the nation, do And when they have been erected-when you have secured for every one of you food for both body and soul-when freely united, entwining your right hands like brothers round a beloved mother, you advance in beautiful and holy concord towards the development of your faculties and the fulfilment of the Italian missionremember that that mission is the moral limity of Europe, remember the immense duties which it imposes upon you. Italy is the only land that has twice uttered the great word of unification to the disjoined nations \Twice Rome has been the metropolis, the temple, of the European world, the first time when our conquering eagles traversed the known world from end to end and prepared it for union by introducing civilised institutions, the second time when, after the Northern conquerors had themselves been subdued by the potency of Nature, of great memories and of religious inspiration. the genius of Italy incarnated itself in the Papacy and undertook the solemn mission-abandoned four centuries ago-of preaching the union of souls to the peoples of the Christian world, To-day a third mission is dawning for our Italy, as much vaster than those of old as the Italian People, the free and united Country which you are going to found, will be greater and more powerful than Cæsars or Popes. The presentiment of this mission agitates Europe and keeps the eye and the thought of the nations chained to Italy

Your duties to your Country are proportioned to the loftness of this mission. You have to keep it pure from goism, uncontaminated by falsehood and by the arts of that political Tesuitsm which they call diplomacy.

The government of the country will be based through your labours upon the worship of principles, not upon the idolatrous worship of interests and of opportunity There are countries in Europe where Liberty is sacred within, but is systematically violated without, peoples who say, Truth is one thing, utility another theory is one thing, practice another. Those countries will have inevitably to explate their guilt in long isolation, oppression, and anarchy But you know the mission of our Country, and will pursue another path. Through you Italy will have, with one only God in the heavens, one only truth, one only faith, one only rule of political life upon earth. Upon the edifice, sublimer than Capitol or Vatican, which the people of Italy will raise, you will plant the banner of Liberty and of Association, so that it shines in the sight of all the nations, nor will you lower it ever for terror of despots or lust for the gains of a day You will have boldness as you have faith You will speak out aloud to the world, and to those who call themselves the lords of the world, the thought which thrills in the heart of Italy. You will never deny the sister nations The life of the Country !shall grow through you in beauty and in strength, free [from servile fears and the hesitations of doubt, keeping as its foundation the people, as its rule the consequences; of its principles logically deduced and energetically applied, as its strength the strength of all, as its outcome the amelioration of all, as its end the fulfilment of the. mission which God has given it. And because you will be ready to die for Humanity, the life of your Country will be immortal. 61,7

DUTIES TO THE FAMILY

THE Family is the Country of the heart There is a angel in the Family who, by the mysterious influence of grace, of sweetness, and of love, renders the fulfilmen of duties less wearisome, sorrows less bitter. The only oure love unmixed with sadness which it is given to man to taste upon earth are, thanks to this angel, the 10vs of the Family \He who through fatality of cir cumstances has been unable to live the serene life of the Family, beneath the wings of this angel, has shadow of melancholy resting upon his soul, and void in his heart which nothing can fill, and I who write these pages for you know it. Bless God who created this angel, oh you who have the joys and consolations of the Family Do not hold them of little account because you imagine that you can find elsewhere more ardent toys or more immediate consolation fo your griefs The Family contains an element of good rarely found elsewhere, constancy Its affections wind themselves slowly around you, unheeded, but tenacious and enduring as the ivy round the tree, they follow you hourly, and identify themselves silently with your life Often you are not aware of them, because they are a part of yourselves, but when you lose them you fee that an indefinable something, something intimate and necessary to your existence, is gone You wander restless and uneasy . You may still be able to find brief joys or consolations, but not the supreme consolation, not calm, the calm of the wave upon the lake, the calm of trustful sleep, the sleep which stills the child upon its mother's breast.

The angel of the Family is Woman. Mother, wife, or sister, Woman is the cares of life, the soothing sweetness of affection shed over its toils, a reflection for the individual of the lowing providence which watches over Humanity. In her there is treasure enough of consoling tenderness to allay every pain. Moreover for every one of us she, is the initiator of the future. The mother's first kins teaches the child love, the first holy kins of the woman he lowes teaches man hope and faith in hie, and love and faith create a desire for prefection and the and love and the control of the things symbol cache the control of the control o

Hold the Family sacred, then, O my brothers Hold it as an inseparable condition of hie and repulse every assault which may be made upon it by men imbued with false and brutal philosophies, or by hasty thinkers who seeing it too often the nursery of selfishness and of the spirit of caste, grow angry and believe, like the barbaran, that the only remedy for its evils is to destroy that

The Family is the conception of God, not of man No human power can abolish it. Like the Country, and much more than the Country, the Family is an element of life

Much more than the Country, I say The Country, scared today, will perhaps some day disappear, when every man shall reflect in his own conscience the moral laws of Humanity, but the Family will endure as long as man endures v II is the cradle of Humanity. Like every element of human life, it must be open to Progress, and its tendencies, its aspirations, must improve from encoch to epoch, but no one may ever suppress from

To sanctify the Family more and more and to link it ever closer to the Country, this is your mission. What, the Country is to Humanity, the Family must be to the Country. I have told you that the task of the Country is to educate men, even so the task of the family is to educate men, even so the task of the family is to educate mens, Family and Country are two externers.

points of the same line. And where this is not so the Family degenerates into egoism, the more disgusting and brutal the more it prostitutes that most holy thing, affection, by diverting it from its true purpose

In the present day, egoism by force of circumstances rooms too often and too much in the Family, Bad social institutions generate it. In a society supported by spies, police, prison, and the gallows, the poor mother, trembling at every noble aspiration of her son, is imnelled to teach him distrust , to say Beware! the man who speaks to thee of Country, of Liberty, of the Future. and who wishes to class thee to his breast, is perhaps nothing else than a traitor. In a society in which ment is dangerous, and wealth is the only basis of power, of safety, of defence against persecution and arrogance, affection impels the father to say to the youth athirst for Truth Remare | in riches is the safety . Truth alone cannot shield thee from the power and corruption of others But I am speaking to you of a time when you will have founded for your sons with your sweat and your blood a Country of free men built up on ment and on the good which each of you will have done for his brothers. Till that time it is too true that you have one way only of progress open to you, one supreme duty only to fulfil: to enrol and prepare vourselves, to choose the right moment and to fight and win your Italy by insurrection Then only will you be able to accomplish your other duties without grave and constant obstacles. And then when I shall probably be laid in the earth, you will read these pages of mine again, the few brotherly counsels which they contain come from a heart which loves you, and they are written with sincerity and conviction

Love and respect Woman. Do not seek only consolation in her, but strength, inspiration, a redoubling of your intellectual and moral faculties. Blot out of your mind any idea of superiority to her, you have none whatever. The prejudice of ages has created through unequal education and the perential oppression of the laws that apparent intellectual inferiority which you use to-day as an argument for maintaining the oppression.

But does not the history of all oppression teach you that those who oppress rely always for their justification upon a fact created by themselves > The feudal classe withheld education from you sons of the people almos up to our own day, and then from your want of education they drew, and still to-day draw, their arguments fo excluding you from the sanctuary of the city, from the place where the laws are made, from that right to votwhich initiates your social mission The owners of the negroes in America declare the race radically inferio and incapable of education and yet persecute whoeve seeks to educate it. For half a century the supporter of the reigning families have affirmed that we Italian: are ill-fitted for liberty, and meanwhile by laws and by the brute force of mercenary armies they keep every way closed by which, if the disability did really exist, we might overcome it for ourselves-as if tyranny could ever be an education for liberty

Now, we have all been, and still are, guilty of a like offence towards Woman Put far from you even the shadow of this offence, since there is no graver offence in God's sight than that which divides the human family into two classes and imposes or allows the subjection of one to the other. Before the one God and Father there is neither man nor moman, but the human being the being in whom under the aspect of man or of woman, those characters exist which distinguish humanity from the order of the animals, namely, social tendency, capacity of learning and the faculty of progressing. Wherever these character reveal themselves, there human nature exists, and ir consequence equality of rights and of duties. Like two distinct branches springing out of the same trunk, mar and woman spring in differing forms from a common base which is humanity. No inequality exists between them but, as often happens with two men, a difference o tendencies, of special vocations Are two notes of the same musical chord unequal or of different nature. Man and Woman are the two notes without which the human chord is not possible. Take two Peoples, one called by its peculiar gifts or by its conditions of life o spread the idea of human association by means of colonies, the other to preach it by the production of iniversally admired masterpieces in art and literature. ire their general duties and rights different? Both these Peoples are apostles, consciously or unconsciously, of he same divine conception and are equals and brothers in their mission. Man and Woman, like those wo Peoples, have distinct functions in Humanity, but these functions are equally sacred and necessary to the common development and are both representations of he Thought which God has put like a soul into the universe Hold Woman, then, as the companion and partaker not only of your joys and your sorrows, but of your aspirations, your thoughts, your studies, and your efforts for social amelioration. Hold her as your equal in civil and political life Be together, you and she. the two wings of the human soul, lifting it towards the deal which we must attain. The Mosaic Bible has said. God created the man, and the woman from the man: but your Bible, the Bible of the future, shall say, God reated Humanity, manifested in the woman and in the 111/12/2

Love the children whom Providence sends you, but love them with a true, profound, stern love, not with a nerveless, irrational, blind love, which is egoism in you, and rum for them. In the name of all that is most sacred never forget that you have the charge of the future generations, that towards these souls which are entrusted to you, towards Humanity, and before God, you have the most tremendous responsibility which the human being can be sensible of You must initiate them not into the pleasures and greeds of life, but into life itself, into its duties, into the moral law which governs it Few mothers, few fathers, in this irreligious century, especially in the well-to-do classes, understand the gravity and sanctity of their educational mission Few mothers, few fathers, think that the many victims, the incessant struggles, and the long martyrdom of our times are in great measure the fruit of the egoism instilled thirty years ago into their children's minds by reak mothers or careless fathers who allowed them to et into the habit of regarding life not as a duty and mission, but as a search for pleasure, and an endeavour fler selfish well-being. For you, sons of labour, the langers are less great, most of your children learn only ow well the life of privation. And, on the other hand, ou who are compelled by your inferior social condition o continual toil have fewer possibilities of educating hem properly. Nevertheless even you can parily fulfil he arduous task by your example and by your word > You can do it by your example.

DUTIES TO YOURSELF

Preliminaries

I BAYE said to you. You have life, therefore you have a law of life. . . Yo deadley jourselest, is ad, to live according to the law of life, is your first, nay, your only Duly. I have told you that God has given you two means of knowing what is your law of life; your, won conscience and the conscience of Humanity, the general conviction of your fellow-men. I have told you that whenever you interogate your conscience, and find its voice in harmony with the great voice of the human race which history has transmitted to you, you are certain of having the eternal, the immutable truth in your grasp At the present day it is only with difficulty that you can properly interrogate the great voice with which Humanity speaks to you through history, you lack really good popular books and you have no time. But the men who by their ability and conscientiousness best represent historical study and the science of Humanity in the last half-century have deduced from this voice some of the characters of our law of life. They have found out that human nature is essentially socialand canable of education, that as there is and can be but one God, there can be but one Law for the individual man and for collective Humanity, and that the fundamental and universal character of this Law is PROGRESS From this truth, incontestable to-day because all the branches of human knowledge confirm it, are derived all your duties to yourself, and also all your rights, which are summed up in one: the right to be absolutely unfettered and to be aided, within certain limits, in the fulfilment of your duties

You are and you feel yourselves free All the sonhisms of a wretched philosophy which would subshrute a doctrine of I know not what fatalism for the cry of the human conscience, cannot avail to silence two invincible witnesses in favour of liberty, remorse and martyrdom From Socrates to Jesus, from Jesus down to the men who die from time to time for their Country, the Martyrs of Faith raise their voices against that slavish doctrine, crying out to you "We too loved life, we loved the beings who made it dear to us and who implored us to yield, every impulse of our hearts cried to us live I but for the salvation of future generations we chose to die ". From Cain down to the vulgar spy of our day, all those who betray their brothers, all the men who have set forth on the path of evil, feel in the depths of their soul self-condemnation, restlessness, a reproachful voice saying to each of them, Why do you abandon the paths of good !

You are free, and therefore responsible. From this moral liberty is derived your right to political liberty, your duty to conquer it for yourselves and to keep it inviolate, and the duty of others not to limit it

You are aspable of education. In each of you exists a certain sum of faculties, of mellectual capacities and moral tendencies, to which education alone can give life and activity, and which otherwise would remain sterile and mert, or only reveal themselves by flashes without regular development.

Education is the bread of the soul. Just as physical and organic life cannot grow and unfold without nourishment, so the moral and intellectual life needs external must assimilate a part, at least, of the ideas, affections, and aspirations of others? The life of the individual springs up like the plant, each variety endowed with its own existence and with special characters, upon a common soil, and is nourished with the elements common to the life of all. The individual is a shoot of Humanuty.

and nounshes and renews its own strength in the strength of Humanity. This work of nounshment and renewal is accomplished by education, which transmis to the individual directly or indirectly the results of the progress of the whole human race. It is therefore not only because it is a necessity of your life, but because it is a kind of holy communion with all your fellow-men, and with all the generations which have lived, that is to say, thought and acted, before yours, that you must win education for yourselves as far as possible, a moral and intellectual education, which shall embrace and cultivate all the faculties which God has given you as seed to bring to fruit, and shall form and maintein a boad farmently.

And in order that this work of education should he the more rapidly accomplished, and that your individual life should be linked more surely and intimately with the collective life of all, with the life of Humanity, God has made you essentially social beings Every kind of lower being can live by itself, without other communion than with nature, with the elements of the physical world, you cannot At every step you have need of your brothers, and you could not satisfy the simplest needs of life without aiding yourselves by their work. Though superior to every other being by virtue of association with your fellows, you are when isolated inferior in strength to many animals, and weak and incapable of development and of a complete existence All the noblest aspirations of your heart, such as love of country, and also those less virtuous, such as desire of glory and of others' praise, indicate your inborn tendency to unite your life with the life of the millions who surround you. You are, then, created for association It multiplies your strength a hundredfold, makes the ideas of others yours, and the progress of others yours; and raises, improves, and sanctifies your nature through the affections and the growing sentiment of the unity of the human family. The wider, the more intimate and comprehensive your association with your brothers, the further will you advance on the path of individual

The law of life cannot be wholly accomplished except by the united work of all And for every great advance, for every discovery of a portion of that law, history shows a corresponding extension of human association, a wider contact between peoples and peoples. When the first Christians came to proclaim the unity of human nature, in opposition to the pagan philosophy which admitted two human natures, that of masters and that of slaves, the Roman people had borne its eagles into the midst of all the known peoples of Europe Before the Papacy-baleful to-day, but beneficial in the first centuries of its institution—came to announce: the spiritual power is higher than the temporal, the invaders. whom we call the Barbarians, had brought the Germanic and the Latin worlds into violent contact. Before the idea of liberty as applying to the peoples had started the conception of nationality which now agitates Europe and is destined to triumph, the wars of the French Revolution and of the Empire had roused and called into action an element separate till then from the rest of Europe, the Slav element

Lastly, you are progressive beings

This word Progress, unknown to antiquity, will be from henceforth a sacred word for Humanity. It comprehends a whole social, political, and religious transformation.

Antiquity, the men of the old Oriental and Pagan religions believed in Fate, in Chance, in a mysterious incomprehensible Power, the arbitrary disposer of human things, creating and destroying alternately, without men being able to understand, promote, or accelerate its action. They believed that than was powerless to found anything enduring and permanent upon our earth. They believed that the peoples were condemned to move for ever in the circle described by individuals here below, that they rose, mounted upwards to power, then descended to old age, and fatally, irrevocably persibed with the paravovest horizon of views and of fairs before them, and without any knowledge of history beyond that of their own nation, and often of their own city, they regarded the human race solely as an aggregate of men, without any life or law of its own, and derived their ideas of it from contemplation of the individual only The consequence of such doctrines was a disposition to accept existing facts without troubling or hoping to change them Where circumstances had founded a republican form of government, the men of those times were republicans, where despotism reigned, they were submissive slaves, indifferent to progress But since they found the human family everywhere, under a republican government and under tyranny alike, divided either into four castes, as in the East, or into two, free citizens and slaves, as in Greece, they accepted the division of castes, or the belief in two different kinds of men, even Plato and Aristotle, the most powerful intellects of the Greek world, accepted it. The emancipation of your class would have been an impossibility among men like these

The men who founded upon the words of Jesus a religion superior to all the beliefs of the ancient East and of Paganism, dimly foresaw, but did not grasp the holy idea contained in this word, Progress They understood the unity of the human race, the unity of the law. and the perfect bility of man, but they did not understand the power of accomplishing it which God has given to man, nor the way in which it must be accomplished ? They limited themselves also to deducing the rule of life from the contemplation of the individual Humanity as a collective body remained unknown to them. They recognised a Providence and substituted it for the blind Fatality of the ancients, but they recognised it as the protector of the individual, not as the law of Humanity. Their mental position between the immensity of the ideal of perfectibility which they had conceived, and the sense of the brief miserable life of the individual, created a need for an intermediary term between the two. between God and man, and not having grasped the idea of a collective humanity, they had recourse to that of a divine incarnation, they declared that faith in this incarnation was the only source of salvation, of strength, of grace for men

Not suspecting the continuous revelation which descends from God upon man through Humanity, they believed in an immediate and single revelation given at one fixed moment, and by the special favour of God They perceived the link which binds men together in God, but they did not perceive that which binds them together here upon earth in Humanity. The succession of the generations was of little importance to those who did not feel how one generation acts upon another , they accustomed themselves therefore to disregard them, and strove to detach man from the world and from the things which concern Humanity as a whole, and they finished by calling the earth, which they abandoned to the existing powers, a mere abode of expiation, putting it in antagonism to heaven, whither man might climb by means of grace and faith, but from which without those means he was eternally exiled Revelation being in their opinion immediate and vouchsafed once only at a given period, they concluded that nothing could be added to it. and that the depositaries of this revelation were infallible They forgot that in a solemn moment, and with a sublime intuition of the future, Jesus had said I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot hear them now Howbest when he, the Spirit of truth is come, he will suide you into all truth, for he shall not speak of himself, but whatsoever he shall hear that shall he speak 1 These words contain a forecast of the idea of progress and of the continuous revelation of the truth through the medium of Humanity, in them is found the justification of the formula which reawakened Rome will offer to Italy in the words "God and the People" inscribed on the front of its republican decrees But the men who held the beliefs of the middle ages could not understand it. The times were not yet ripe

The whole edifice of the creeds which succeeded to Paganism rests upon the foundations just indicated. It is clear that your emancipation here on earth cannot be based upon these,

Thirteen hundred years after the words of Jesus which I have quoted were snoken, a man, an Italian, the greatest of all Italians, wrote the following truths "God is one, the Universe is God's thought, the Universe therefore is also one. All things come from God. All partake more or less of the divine nature, according to the end for which they are created. Man is the noblest of all created things God has poured into him more of His own nature than into the others Everything which comes from God tends towards the perfection of which it is capable. The capacity of perfection in man is unlimited. Humanity is one God has made nothing useless; and because there is one Humanity only, there must be a single aim for all men, a work to be accomplished by the labour of all together. The human race must therefore work in union so that all the intellectual powers diffused in it may obtain the highest possible development in the sphere of thought and of action. There exists, then, a universal Religion for the human race "

The man who gave utterance to these thoughts was named Dante. Every city of Italy, when Italy is free and united, ought to rase a statue to him, since these thoughts contain the germ of the Religion of the Future He wrote them in Latin and Italian books entitled Dr. Monarchia and I Counto, difficult to understand, and neglected in the present day even by those who call themselves scholars. But these ideas, once sown in the even when they forget their origin. Men admire the oak, but who remembers the acom from which it strang. 2.

The seed which Dante cast aboud has borne fur Tended and fertilised from time to time by some powerful intellect, it developed towards the end of the eighteenth century. "The idea of Progress as the law of life, accepted and developed, verified by history, and confirmed by science, became the banner of the future. To-day there is no serious thinker who does not recard; it as the mive of his work.

We know to-day that the law of life is Progress. Progress for the individual, progress for Humanity. Humanity fulfils that law on earth, the Individual on earth and elsewhere. One only God, one only Law. From the first moment of its existence Humanity has been gradually but inevitably fulfilling that Law Truth has never manifested itself wholly or all at once continuous revelation manifests a fragment of the truth. a word of the Law, from age to age Each of these words profoundly modifies human life upon the path towards perfection, and constitutes a belief, a Faith. The development of the religious Idea is, then, indefinitely progressive, and the successive beliefs, unfolding and purifying this Idea ever more and more, will one day, like columns of a temple, build up the Pantheon of Humanity, the one great religion of our earth. The men blessed by God with genius and with more than common virtue are its apostles, the People, the collective sense of Humanity, is its interpreter, and accepts this revelation of Truth. transmits it from generation to generation, and reduces it to practice by applying it to the different branches and manifestations of human life

Humanity is like a man who lives for an indefinite period and is always learning. There is not, therefore. and there cannot be, infallibility in men, or in Powers, there is not, and cannot be, a privileged class of depositaries and interpreters of the Law, there is not, and cannot be, a need of any intermediary between God and man save Humanity alone. God, by preordaining a providential design of progressive education for Humanity, and planting the instinct of progress in the heart of every man, has also put into human nature the faculties and powers necessary to fulfil it. Individual man, a free and responsible creature, is able to use or abuse them according to whether he keeps to the path of Duty, or yields to the blind seductions of Egoism; he can delay or hasten his own progress, but the providential design cannot be annulled by any human power. The education of Humanity must complete itself, thus we see out of the barbaric invasions which seemed to extinguish all civilised

Infe a new civilisation arise superior to the old, and diffused over a wider zone of the earth; out of a tyranny exercised by individuals we see a more rapid development of liberty immediately issue.

The Law of Progress must be accomplished here upon earth as elsewhere. There is no antagonism between earth and heaven and it is a blasphemy to suppose that we can, without incurring guilt, despise the work of God. the house which He has given us, and abandon it to the Powers that be, whatever their nature, to the influences of Evil, of Egoism, and of Tyranny The earth is not a place of expiation, it is the place for working to realise the sdeal of truth and justice which each of its bears implanted in his soul: it is a ladder towards that Perfection which we can only reach by glorifying God in Humanity with our works and by consecrating ourselves to translating into fact as much as we can of His design. The judgment which will be pronounced upon each one of us, either decreeing our upward progress upon the ladder of Perfection, or condemning us to drag ourselves once again along the course which we have already trodden with barren results or in actual sin, will be founded on the good which we have done to our brothers, upon the degree of progress which we have helped others to A more and more intimate and extended association with our fellow-men is the means by which our strength will be multiplied, the field on which our duties must be accomplished, the way to realise progress in action We must aim at making the whole of Humanity one Family, each member of which shall represent in himself the moral law for the benefit of the others And as the perfecting of Humanity is accomplished from age to age, from generation to generation, so the perfecting of the individual is accomplished from existence to existence, more or less rapidly according to our own efforts.

These are some of the truths contained in that word!
Progress from which shall come forth the Religion of the Future In that word alone can your emancipation be achieved.

You live. The life which is in you is not the work of Chance; the word Chance has no meaning whatever and was only invented to express the ignorance of men about certain things. The life which is in you comes from God, and reveals in its progressive development an intelligent design. Your life has necessarily then an arman purposes.

The ultimate aim for which we were created is at present unknown to us and cannot be otherwise, but this is no reason why we should deny it. Does the babe know the purpose towards which it must tend through Family, Country, Humanity? No , but the purpose exists, and we are beginning to know it for him Humanity is_God's babe, He knows the end towards which it must develop. Humanity is only just beginning today to understand that Progress is its law; it is only just beginning to understand, uncertainly, something of the Universe around it, and the greater part of the individuals who compose it are still quite unfit, in consequence of barbarism, slavery, or absolute lack of education, for the study of this Law and of the Universe which is necessary before we can understand ourselves. Only a minority of the men who people our little Europe are capable of developing their intellectual faculties for the purpose of acquiring knowledge. In you yourselves, most of you deprived of instruction and all subjected by necessity to a life of badly organised physical labour, those faculties lie dormant and are unable to bring their tribute to the pyramid of knowledge. How, then, can we expect to know to day that which requires the ssociated work of all? Why rebel against our not aving yet reached the point which will constitute the ast step of our earthly Progress, when as yet only a few f us, and those disunited, are beginning even to list hat sacred and fruitful word? Let us resign ourselves, hen, to ignorance of the things which must be inaccesible to us for a long while yet, and do not let us abandon n childish anger the study of those which we are able to iscover The discovery of the truth demands modesty and self restraint, as much as constancy Many more souls save been lost or led astray from the right path by mpatience and human pride than by deliberate wickediess. It is this truth which the ancients would teach is when they tell how the Despot ambitious of scaling he heavens could only build up a tower of confusion, ind how the Giants who assailed Olympus lie blasted by thunderbolts beneath our volcanic mountains.

The important thing for us to be convinced of is, that thatever the end may be for which we are destined, we an only discover and attain it by the progressive development and the exercise of our intellectual faculties or the instruments of labour given us by God it is necessary therefore that their development should be furthered and helped, and their exercise be free and rotected. Without Liberty you cannot fulfil any of our duties, you have therefore a right to liberty and he duty to wrest it by any means from any power whatever which denies it to work.

Vilthout Liberty monthly does not exist, because if there is not freedom of choice between good and evil, setween devotion to the common progress and the upurt of egoism, there is no responsibility. Without Liberty no true society exists, because between free men and slaves there can be no association, but only dominion of some over the others. Liberty is staced as the individual whose life it represents is sacred. Where there is not Liberty, life is reduced to a mere organic function. A man who allows his biberty to be violated is false to ms own nature and a rebel against the decrees of God.

assumes dominion over others in virtue of a pretended divine right, or of a privilege derived from birth or wealth Liberty must be for all and in the sight of all. God does not delegate sovereignty to any individual. that degree of sovereignty which can be represented on our earth is entrusted by God to Humanity, to the Nations. to Society And this also ceases and abandons the collective fractions of Humanity if they do not use it for good, for the fulfilment of the providential design. There exists, then, no sovereignty of right in any one, sovereignty is in the Aim, and in the actions which lead to it. The actions and the aim towards which we are advancing must be submitted to the underment of all There is not and cannot be, then, any permanent sovereignty . That institution which we call Government is only a Direction, a mission entrusted to a few in order to attain more speedily the aim of the Nation; and if they are false to this mission. the directing power entrusted to these few must cease Every man called to the Government is an administrator of the common will, he must be elected and must be subject to recall whenever he misunderstands or deliberately opposes that will There cannot exist then. I repeat, a class or family which holds the power by its own right, without a violation of your liberty. How can you call yourselves free in the presence of men who possess the power to command you without your consent? The republic is the only legitimate and logical form of government...

You have no master but God in heaven and the People on earth. When you have discovered a line of the Law, of God's will, you must bless it and obey it When the People, the collective body of your fellows, declare that they hold a certain belief, you must bow your head and abstan from every act of rebellion.

But there are things which constitute your individual being and are essential to human life. And over these not even the People has any right. No majority, no collective force can rob you of that which makes you men. No majority can decree a tynany and extinguish altenate its own liberty Against a people who would immit such suicide you cannot use force, but the right protest by whatever means circumstances may suggest you lives and will live in each of you eternally

You ought to have liberty and everything that is dispensable for the moral and material nourishment

Personal liberty, liberty of locomotion, liberty of reposs belief, liberty of opinion on all subjects; liberty of opinion on all subjects; liberty of opinion on all subjects; liberty of pressing opinion through the press or by any other acceful method, liberty of saxociation so as to be able to illivate your own minds by contact with the minds of theirs, liberty of trade in all the productions of your rains and hands these are all things which no one may like from you—except on certain rare occasions which it not necessary to mention now—without grave injustice, tithout arousing in you the duty to protects.

' No one has the right, in the name of society, to imprison ou or to subject your person to restraint or to espionze, without telling you why with the least possible elay, and conducting you promptly before the judicial uthority of the country. No one has the right to impede ou by passports or other restrictions from passing from ne part to another of your native land No one has any ght of persecution or intolerance or exclusive legislation ver your religious opinions, nothing except the great acific voice of Humanity has the right to interpose self between God and your conscience God has given ou thought, no one has the right to restrain it. or to forad the expression of it, which is the communion of your oul with the soul of your brothers, and the only way of rogress which we have The press must be absolutely ree: the rights of the intellect are inviolable, and any reventive censorship is tyranny, society may only punish he offences of the pen, such as the inculcation of rime and openly immoral teaching, as it punishes other offences Punishment decreed by a solemn public udgment is a consequence of human responsibility, while every intervention beforehand is a negation of iberty. Peaceful association is sacred, like thought; God planted the tendency in you as a perennial means of progress, a pledge of that unity which the human family is destined one day to attain, no power has any right to impede or limit it. The duty of each of you is to use the life which God gave you, to preserve and develop it, each of you, then, owes to life a debt of labour, the sole means of its material sustenance. Labour is sacred No one has the right to forbid it or fetter it or make it impossible by arbitrary regulations. no one has the right to restrain free traffic in its products, your native land is your market, from no part of which you may be shut out.

But when you have obtained the recognition of these liberties as sacred-when you have finally established the state upon the votes of all and in such a manner that all the ways which can lead to the development of human faculties shall be open to the individual—then. remember that still above each of you stands the great aim which it is your duty to attain . the moral perfection of vourself and of others, an ever more intimate and wider communion between all the members of the human family, so that at some future day it shall recognise one Law only.

"Your task is to form the universal family, to build the City of God, and by a continuous labour gradually to translate His work in Humanity into fact.

"When you love one another as brothers and treat each other reciprocally as such, and each one, seeking his own good in the good of all, shall identify his own life with the life of all, his own interests with the interests of all, and shall be always ready to sacrifice himself for all the members of the common family, and they equally ready to sacrifice themselves for him, most of the ills which weigh to-day upon the human race will vanish like the thick mists gathered upon the horizon vanish at the rising of the sun, since it is His will that Love shall unite little by little, and ever more closely, the scattered elements of Humanity and order them in a single body, and Humanity be one, as He is one "1"

Do not let these words, spoken by a man who lived and died like a saint and who loved the people and their future with an immense love, ever be out of your minds, O my brothers \Liberty is only a means woe to you and to your future if you ever accustom yourselves to regard it as an end. Your individual being has duties and rights which may never be given up to any one; but woe to you and to your future if the respect which you owe to what constitutes your individual life should ever degenerate into a fatal egoism! Your Liberty is not the negation of all authority, it is the negation of all authority which does not represent the collective purpose of the Nation, and which presumes to establish and support itself upon any other foundation than that of your free and spontaneous consent. The doctrines of casuists have in these latter times perverted the sacred conception of Liberty, some have reduced it to a mean immoral individualism-have said that the Ego is everything and that the one aim of human labour and social organisation ought to be the satisfaction of its desires, others have declared that all government, all authority, is an inevitable evil, but that it must be restricted and fettered as much as possible, that Liberty has no limits, that the sole task of every society is to promote it indefinitely, that a man has the right to use and abuse Liberty, provided that his action does not result directly in evil to others, and that a government has no mission beyond that of preventing one individual from injuring another Reject these false doctrines. O my brothers. it is they who delay Italy even now upon the road of her future greatness The first has generated the egoism of class, the second turns society, which ought, if well ordered, to represent your collective purpose and life, into nothing more than a soldier or police officer charged to maintain an apparent peace Both debase Liberty into Anarchy, they abolish the idea of collective moral improvement, abolish the mission of education and of Progress which Society ought to take upon itself If you should understand Liberty in this way you would deserve to lose it, and sooner or later you would lose it

Your Liberty will be sacred so long as it developmed the ruling mitience of the Idea of Duty and to Fath in the common perfectibility. Your Liberty will founsh, protected by God and by men, so long as you regard it not as the right to use and to abuse your resulting and priection which it pleases you to choose but as the right to choose freely and according to your special timelance a means of dang good.

EDUCATION

Gon has made you capable of education It is therefore your duty to educate yourselves as far as in you lies. and your right that the society to which you belong should not hinder you in your work of education, but should help you in it and supply you with means of education when you lack them

Your liberty, your rights, your emancipation from unjust social conditions, the life-work which each of von has to fulfil here on earth, depend upon the degree of education which it is given you to obtain. Without education you cannot choose rightly between good and evil, you cannot acquire a knowledge of your own rights, you cannot obtain that share in political life without which you will never succeed in emancipating yourselves, you cannot define your own life-work to yourselves (Education is the bread of your souls Without it your faculties lie numb and unfruitful, as the vital power which dwells in the seed lies sterile if it is cast into untilled soil and lacks the benefit of irrigation and the care of a diligent husbandman.

At the present day you either have no education or else: only bad or madequate instruction, given you by men and powers which represent nothing except themselves and observe no guiding principle. The best of them believe that they have done all that is required of them if they have opened upon the territory which they govern a certain number of schools, unequally distributed, in which your children may receive some degree of elementary teaching This teaching consists principally of reading, writing, and arithmetic, 82

. Such teaching is called instruction, and differs from education as much as our organs differ from our life Our organs are not life, they are only its instruments and its means of manifesting itself, they do not rule or direct it, and they are equally the means of action for the most samily or the most corrupt life. In the same way instruction provides the means of putting into practice what is taught by education, but cannot take the place of education.

Education is addressed to the moral faculties. rastruction to the intellectual. The first develops in man the knowledge of his duties, the second makes him capable of fulfilling them Without instruction, education would be too often ineffective, without education instruction would be a lever lacking a fulcrum. You can read, what does that amount to if you cannot tell which books contain error, which the truth? You are able by writing to communicate your thoughts to your brothers. what is the use if your thoughts only express egoism? · Instruction, like riches, can be a source of either good or evil according to the intention with which it is used. Consecrated to the general progress it is a means of civilisation and of liberty, used only for personal advantage it becomes a means of tyranny and corruption In Europe to-day instruction unaccompanied by a corresponding degree of moral education is a very grievous evil, it keeps up the inequality between class and class of the same people and inclines the mind to calculation, to egoism, to compromises between justice and injustice and to all false doctrine

The distinction between the men who offer you more or less instruction, and those who preach education to you, is deeper than you suppose, and I must devote a few words specially to the subject

Two schools of thought divide the camp of those who fight for liberty against despotsm. The first declare that soweragety lesides in the individual, the second maintains that it belongs to society only, and rules by means of the expressed will of the majority. The first imagines that it has fulfilled its peculiar mission when it has proclaimed the rights believed to be inherent in human nature, and has safeguarded liberty, the segond looks almost exclusively to association, and deduces the dutate of each individual from the compact which constitutes that association. The first does not see beyond! what I have called nistration, because instructure tends in fact to give facilities of development to the individual; facilities, but without any general direction, the second understands the necessity of an education which is four leads mertably to moral anarchy, the second cruds to, forget the rights of liberty, and runs a risk of leading to the despoision of the majority.

To the infection of the school that generation of menbelonged not created by the school that produced the belonged to create the school that generatives, who betrayed the hopes of the people after the Revolution or 15gs, and by proclaming their of mixtuction and nothing else, perpetuated the governing monopoly in the hands of the mixtle class; which possesses more means of developing its individual faculties, the second is unfortunately only represented today by sects and powers belonging to antiquated beliefs, and hostile to the dogma of the future, Progress

Both these schools err through too narrow and

'The truth is this All sovereignty is in God, in the moral law, in the providential design which governs the world-and which is gradually revealed by the inspirations of men of virtuous genius, and by the natural tendency of Humanity in the different epochs of its existence-in the purpose which we have to attain, and the mission which we have to fulfil There is no sovereignty in the individual, there is none in society except in so far as the one and the other conform to that design, to that law, and direct themselves towards the attainment of that purpose An individual who rules is either the best interpreter of the moral law and governs in its name, or a usurper to be overthrown The mere vote of a majority does not constitute sovereignty, if it is evidently adverse to the supreme moral law, or deliberately closes the way to future progress Social good, liberty, progress, outside these three terms there can be no sovereignty

Education teaches in what social welfare consists

Instruction secures for the individual the free choice of means of obtaining a continuous progress in the conception of social welfare.

It is of first importance to you that your sons should be taught what are the ruling principles and beliefs which guide the lives of their fellow-men in their own times and in their own country, what the moral, social, and political programme of their nation is, what the spirit of the legislation by which their deeds will have to be sudged, what degree of progress Humanity has already attained, and that which it has yet to attain And it is important to you that they should feel themselves from their earliest years united in the spirit of equality and of love for a common aim, with the millions of brothers that God has given them

of teaching can come only from the Nation

The moral teaching of to-day is mere anarchy Left exclusively to the parents, it is nil where poverty and the necessity of an almost incessant material toil deprive them of time for educating their children themselves, and of means of providing other teachers, it is bad where egoism and corruption have perverted and contaminated the family When means exist the young ones are imbued with superstitious or materialistic ideas. with tendencies towards Liberty or towards cowardly resignation, towards aristocracy or reaction against aristocracy, according to whether a layman or priest is chosen for the instructor by the paternal inclination. Taught thus, how can they when they are grown to manhood associate themselves in brotherly union for a common task, and represent in their own persons the unity of the country? Society calls upon them to further the development of a common idea into which they have never been initiated. Society punishes them for violation of laws of which they are still ignorant, and the spirit and scope of which are never taught by society to the citizen Society desires of them co-operation and sacrifice for an end which no teacher has unfolded to them at the opening of their lives as citizens Strange to say, the Doctringire School which I have mentioned above recognises the right to rule and teach the young in each individual, but not in the association of all, not in the Nation. Their cry, Liberty of teaching, disinherits the country of its right of moral direction. They declare the uniformity of the monetary system and of weights and measures to be of first importance; but the uniformity of the principles on which the national life must be founded and developed is nothing to them You should not let yourselves be beguiled by this cry which almost all the modern supporters of Constitutional Governments repeat one after the other Without National Education, from which alone a national conscience can issue, a Nation has no moral existence.

Without National Education common to all the citizens, equality of dutter and of rights is a formula devoid of meaning, the knowledge of dutters and the capacity of exercising rights are left to the chance of fortune or to the arbitrary will of those who choose the teachers

The men who proclaim their opposition to uniformity of education invoke liberty, Whose liberty? That of the fathers or of the children? The liberty of the children is violated, in their system, by the paternal despotsam, the liberty of the younger generations is sacinfaced to the old, the liberty of progress becomes an illusion Individual beliefs, perhaps false and hostile to progress, are alone transmitted to the child, and with the weight of the paternal authority, at an age when mugury short them is impossible. Later on, the destury which chains them is migrated to the state of the paternal authority, at an age when mugury which chains will prevent the young soul, already impressed with these beliefs, from companing them with others and modifying them. In the name of that lying liberty, the anarchical system, of which I now speak, tends to found and perpetuate the worst of all despotisms, a moral

What this system advocates should be properly called arbitrary will, not Liberty True Liberty cannot exist without equality, and there can be no equality among those who do not proceed from one basis, from a common principle, from a uniform sense of Duty. Liberty cannot be exercised outside that sense of Duty. I told you a few pages back that true Liberty does not consist in the right to choose evil, but in the right to choose between the paths which lead to good The liberty invoked by these false philosophers is an arbitrary right given to the father to choose evil for the son If a father threatened to mutilate or mure in any way the body of his child, society would interfere, invoked by public opinion, and shall the soul, the mind of this being be of less account than the body? Shall not society protect it from the mutilation of its faculties, ignorance, and from the perversion of the moral sense. superstation ?

That cry of liberty of teaching served a useful purpose at the time when it first arose, and is useful also in the present day whenever moral education is the monopoly of a despotic Government, of a retrograde caste, or a priesthood antagonistic by the nature of its dogmas to Progress It was a weapon against tyranny, an imperfect but indispensable watchword of emancipation Let it serve you wherever you are slaves But I am speaking to you of a time when religious faith shall write the word Progress on the doors of the temple, and every public institution shall repeat this word in various forms, when National Education shall at the conclusion of its teaching dismiss the pupils with these words . To you, destined to live under a common compact with us, we have taught the fundamental bases of this compact, the principles in which your Nation believes to-day But remember that the first of these principles is Progress Remember that your nussion as a man and as a citisen is to improve the mind and the heart of your brothers, wherever you can Go, examine, compare, and if you discover a truth superior to what we believe we possess, publish it boldly and you will have the blessing of your Country. Then, but not before, renounce that cry of the the blessing of the truth of the Country. Ask, and exact, the establishment of a system of free national education, compulsory for all

✓ It is the duty of the Nation to communicate its programme to every citizen Every citizen ought to; receive in its schools moral teaching, a course in the history of nationalities, including a rapid survey of the progress of Humanity, and in the history of his own country, a popular exposition of the principles which direct the legislation of the country, and the elementary instruction about which there is no dispute Every citizen ought to learn in these schools equality and love.

This programme once transmitted to the citizens, Liberty regains its rights. Not only the teaching of the family, but every other is sacred. Every man has an unlimited right to communicate his own ideas to others, every man has the right to hear them. Society ought to protect, to encourage, the free expression of thought in every form, and to throw open every way for the development and modification of the social programme in the direction of Good.

ASSOCIATION -- PROGRESS

Goo has made you social and progressive hengs I is your duty, then, to associate yourselves and to progress as much as is possible in the sphere of activity in which you are placed by circumstances, and it is your right to demand that the society to which you belong shall not mpede you in your work of association and of progress, but shall help you in it and supply you with the means of association and of progress for unknown that the mount of association and of progress for unknown the mount of association and of progress for unknown the mount of association and of progress for you lack them

J. Liberty gives you the power of choosing between good and evil, that is, between duty and egoism Education must teach you how to cheese Association must grow the means with which to put your choice into practice. Progress is the end which you must have in sight when you choose and is at the same time, when vaibly achieved, the proof that you were not mistaken in your choice. When a single one of these conditions to the chief of the conditions of the chief of the chie

You must fight, then, for all these things and especially for the right of Association, without which liberty and education would be useless.

The right of Association is as sacred as religion, which is the association of souls You are all sons of God, you are therefore brothers, and is it not a crime to restrict association, communion between brothers?

The word communion, used deliberately here, was spoken to you by that Christianity which men' proclaimed in the past as the immutable truth, but which is in fact one step only in the ascending series of the religious manifestations of Humanity And it is a holy word. It taught men that they were a single family of equals in God, and it united master and slave in the same thought of salvation, in the same hope, and the same love of heaven.

It was an immense advance on earlier times when people and philosophers believed the souls of citizens and of slaves to be of different nature. This mission was enough for Christianity—The communion was the symbol of the equality and the brotherhood of souls, it; remained for Humanity to expand and develop the truth hudden in that symbol.

The Church could not and did not do it Timid and uncertain in its beginning, alled with princes and temporal powers later, and imbued by self-interest with an aristocratic tendency alse no the spin of its Founder, awardered from the right way and retrograded so far as to diminish the value of the communion by limiting if for alymen to communion in bread alone and reserving for priests communion in the two kinds Thenceforward the cry of all who felt the right of the whole human family to an unrestricted communion, without distinction between ecclesiastics and laymen. was. Communion in both kinds for the people, the chalice for the beable ! In the fifteenth century this cry was the cry of insurgent multitudes and the prelude, sanctified by martyrdom, of the religious reform . A holy man, John Huss of Bohemia, leader of this movement, perished in the flames kindled by the Inquisition. Most of you today are ignorant of the history of these old struggles, or think they were only fanatical struggles over purely theological questions But when history, popularised by National Education, has taught you that every step forward in religious thought brings a corresponding progress in civil life, you will understand the true value of these conflicts, and honour the memory of these martyrs as your benefactors

We owe to them and to the martyrs who preceded them our knowledge to-day that there is no privileged class between God and man, that the best among us in writte and in knowledge of divine and human things may and ought to conniel and direct us on the right path, but without a monopoly of power or any class supernacy, and that the right of communion is equal for all. What is holy in besven is holy on earth. And the communion of men in God brings as its consequence the association of men in the earthly life. From the rightous association of souls prings the right of association in the faculties and works which convert thought into earths.

Consider Association, then, as your duty and your right. Some who would limit the citizen's right to association will tell you that the true association is the State, the Nation, that you are and ought to be all members of it, and that therefore any partial association between you is either adverse to the State, or superfluous

But the State, the Nation, only represents the association of the citizens in those timps and those aims which are common to all the men who compose it. There exist aims and ends which do not embrace all the citizens, but only a certain number of them. And as a citizens, but only a certain number of them. And as so the aims and ends common to all constitute the Nation, so the aims and ends common to about of the citizens owelt to constitute the sizeal association.

Moreover-and this is the fundamental basis of the right of association-association is the guarantee of Progress. The State represents a certain sum and set of principles in which the universal body of citizens are agreed at the time of its foundation. Suppose that a new and true principle, a new and reasonable development of the truths which give life to the State, is revealed to some of the citizens, how can they spread the knowledge of it without association? Suppose that in consequence of scientific discoveries, of new communications opened between one people and another, or from some other cause, a new interest becomes apparent to a certain number of men belonging to the State, how can those who are first aware of it make a place for it among the long-existing interests, except by uniting their individual means and strength? Inertia and content with the condition of things already existing and sanctioned by the common consent of mankind are habits of mind too natural in men to allow a single individual to shake them and overcome them. But the association of a minority which grows every day can do it Association is the method of the future. Without it the State would remain stationary, enchanded to the degree of civilisation already reached

The object of association should be progressis, not contrary to truth the stablished for ever by the universal signement of the stablished for ever by the universal signement extensive and the Nation. An association instituted for the purpose of sacitating the robbery of other people's poerty, an association which the problem of the Nation of the Stablish of the S

And finally association must respect in others the rights which spring from the essential conditions of human nature. An association which, like the mediaval corporations, should violate the liberty of labour, or should tend directly to restrict liberty of conscience, might justifiably be repressed by the Nation through its government.

Outside these limits liberty of association among citizens is as sacred and mivilible as Progress, to which it gives life. Any government which should attempt to restrict it would betray its social mission; it would be the duty of the people, first to warn it, and, when all nearlier means had been exhausted, to overthrow it.

And these, O my Brothers, are the principal grounds upon which your Dutes are based, the sources from which your Rights spring. An infinite number of special piestons may arise in your civil life, but it is not the scope of this work to foresee, or help you to solve, them The sole insention of my work is to point out to you the transplets which, like torches for your path, should guide out in dealing with these questions, and which, if sincerly applied, will always supply you with a means of volving them. And this, I think, I have done

I have pointed to God as the source and pledge of equality among men, to the moral law as the source of very coul law, and the standard by which you must udge the conduct of those who make the laws, to the seople, to you, ourselves, the universal body of citizens the form the nation, as the sole letitude interester of

he law, and the source of all polytical power

I have told you that the fundamental character of the aw is Progress, progress unlimited and continuous from ige to age, progress in every branch of human activity, n every manifestation of thought, from religion down to ndustry and the distribution of wealth

I have pointed out to you what your dutte are to Humanity, to the Country, to the Family, and to your-elves And I have deduced these duties from the haracters which constitute the human creature, and which you are under an obligation to develop. These haracters, monobale in every man, are liberty, apability of education, social tendencies, capacity, and he necessity of progressing. And from these essential haracters, without which a human being is neither a nan nor a citzen, I have deduced your duties, your spits, and the general nature of the government which or ought to seek for your country. Do not ever forget these principles Keep watch so that they may never be violated Incarnate them in yourselves, and you will be free and will progress

The work which I have undertaken for you would, then, be complete, if a tremendous obstacle to your fulfilment of these duties and the exercise of these rights did not arise out of the very heart of society as it is now constituted, namely, the meguality of means.

For the fulfilment of duties, and for the exercise of rights, three things are necessary: time, intellectual development, and an assured material existence

Now, very many of you in the present day do not possess these elements of progress. Their life is a constant and uncertain struggle to gain the means of sustaining material existence, it is not a question for them of progressing, but of living.

There exists, then, a profound and radical evil in society as it is organised to-day And my work would be useless if I did not define this evil, and point out to you the way to correct it

The Economic question will therefore be the subject of the final portion of my work.

Many, too many of you, are poor For three-fourths at least of the men who belong to the working-classes, whether agricultural or industrial, life is a daily struggle to gain the means indispensable to existence. They work with their hands ten, twelve, sometimes fourteen hours a day, and yet by this assiduous, monotonous, severe labour they barely earn the necessaries of physical existence. To point out to them the duty of progress. to speak to them of intellectual and moral life, of political rights, of education, is, in the actual state of society, sheer irony They have neither the time nor the means for progress. Worn out, exhausted, halfstupefied by a life spent in a round of petty mechanical toils, they learn in it a dumb, impotent, often unjust rancour against the class of men who employ them. they seek forgetfulness of their present sufferings and of the uncertainty of the morrow in the excitement of strong drink, and lay themselves down to rest in places more fitly described as dens than as rooms, to awake next day to the same dull exercise of their physical powers

This is a terrible condition, and it must be altered

You are men, and as such you have faculties, not only physical, but ntiellectual and moral, which it is you duty to develop, you ought to be attient, and as such you ought to exercise for the general benefit rights which demand a certain degree of education and a certain amount of the second property of the second prope

It is clear that you ought to work less and earn more than you do to-day

We who are all sons of God and brothers in Him one to another are called to form one single large family. In this family there may evist inequalities resulting from different applitudes, different capacities, inclination to different kinds of work. But one principle ought to rule in Whomers is suiting to gran for the good of all that much of work of which he is capable supply continued to obtain enough recompense camble kint to declaye his own special life more or less in all the aspects which define it as humans in the supplies of the contract of the contract of the supplies of the contract of the

This is the séeat which we ought to study how to approach more nearly from century to century. Every change, every revolution, which does not bring us one step nearer to it, which does not achieve a seeal advance in correspondence with the schianal advance, which does not further by one degree the material improvement of the poorer classes, wolstack God's desaye, and debases itself to a war of factions, each seeking unlawful domning, it is a lie and an evil

But how far can we realise this ideal to-day? And how and by what means can we realise it?

Some of your more timid friends have sought the remedy in the morality of the working-man himself. Founding savings-banks or other like institutions, they have said to the working-men, Bring your wages here, save, abstain from all excess in drink and other things, free yourselves from want by self-denial And these are excellent counsels, since they seek the moral reform of the working-man, without which all reforms would be useless But they do not solve the questions of poverty, nor do they take any account of social duty Very few of you can save anything out of your wages And those very few can only by slow and patient accumulation provide in part for their old age. But economic reform must have in view provision for the period of manhood, for the development and full expansion of life when it is active and strong and can help efficaciously towards the progress of the Country and of Humanity With regard to material welfare, the question is how to encrease wealth and production, and the counsels of which I have spoken do not indicate how this is to be done either. Moreover society, which lives by the labour of the sons of the people and demands of them a tribute of blood whenever danger threatens it, has a sacred debt towards them Other thinkers there are, not enemies of the people, but only indifferent to them and to the cry of suffering which rises from the hearts of the men of labour, and fearful of any important innovation. These, attached to a socalled school of economists who fought meritoriously and successfully all the battles for liberty of industry, but without taking into consideration the necessity of progress and of association as inseparable from human nature. maintained, and still maintain, like the philanthropists of whom I have just spoken, that every one can, even in actual conditions, build up his own independence by his own activity. They declare that any change in the system of labour would turn out superfluous or harmful, and that the formula Every one for hamself and liberty for all is sufficient to create little by little an approximate equilibrium of ease and comfort among the classes that constitute society Freedom of internal trade, freedom of commerce among the nations, a gradual reduction of custom duties, especially upon raw materials, general encouragement given to great industrial enterprises, to the multiplication of ways of communication and to all machinery that increases production-this is as much as society can do according to the economists, any further intervention on its part would be. according to them, a source of evil-

If they were right the disease of poverty would be incurable, and God forbid, O my Brothers, that I should ever be persuaded to agree with them, and fing as an answer to your sufferings and your aspirations this desparing, athesisted, immoral conclusion God has decreed for you a better future than that contained in the remedies of the economists

temporary increase in the production of wealth, not atits more equal distribution. While the philanthropists contemplate the man alone, and endeavour to make him more moral without troubling themselves to increase the general wealth by giving him any opportunity of improving his material conditions, the economists think only of increasing the sources of production without concerning themselves about the man Under the exclusive régime of liberty which they preach, and which has more or less regulated the economic world in the times nearest to us, the most unimpeachable documentary evidence shows us an increase of productive activity and of capital, but not of universally diffused prosperity The poverty of the working-classes remains unchanged Freedom of competition for those who possess nothing. for those who are unable to save anything from their daily wages, and therefore have nothing with which to start any commercial undertaking, is a lie, just as political freedom is a lie for those who from want of education. instruction, opportunities, and time cannot exercise its rights. Increased facilities of trade, improvements in the means of distribution and exchange, might little by little emancipate labour from the commercial tyranny of the intermediate class between the producer and consumer, but cannot avail to emancipate it from the tyranny of capital, or give the means of labour to those who lack them And for want of an equal distribution of wealth, a juster division of products, and a progressive increase in the number of consumers, capital itself is diverted from its true economic purpose, and remains in part stationary in the hands of a few instead of sureading itself wholly in circulation. It is used for the production of superfluous objects and luxuries, and for the satisfaction of fictitious needs, instead of being concentrated on the production of objects of first necessity for existence, and is tisked in perilous and often unmoral speculations

In the present day capital—and this is the curse of our actual economic society—is the despot of labour.

The three classes which to-day form society in its economic sense are-capitalists, that is, the possessors of the means and implements of labour, namely, lands. factories, ready money, and raw material "contractors, that is, the heads and initiators of labour, commercial men, who represent or ought to represent intellect, and vorking men, who represent manual labour Of these the first class only is master of the field at is his to promote delay, or accelerate the labour at will, and to direct it towards certain ends. And his share in the profits of the work and the value of the production is comparatively determined, the location of the instruments of Jahour does not vary except within known and narrow limits, and time up to a certain point at least is his since he is not under the domination of absolute want . The share of the second is uncertain. it is dependent on their intellect and activity, but particularly on circumstances, on the greater and less development of competition, and on the flow and ebb of capital in consequence of events out of the reach of calculation. The share of the last class, the working-men, is a wage determined before the work is done, and without regard to the greater and lesser profits which result from the enterprise, and the limits within which the wage varies are determined by the relation which exists between the labour offered and the labour required-in other words, between the working population and the capital Now, as the former tends to increase, and to an extent which generally surpasses, even if by only a little, the increase of the latter, wages tend, where other causes do not intervene, to decrease. And time is not in the hands of the working-man Financial and political crises, the sudden application of new machinery to different branches of industrial activity, irregularities in production, and its frequent excessive accumulation in a single direction-an evil inseparable from a shortsighted competition-the unequal distribution of the labouring population on certain points and in certain branches of activity, and many other causes disturbing to labour deprive the working-man of the free choice of his conditions. His alternatives are absolute want.

Such a state of things, I repeat, contains the germs of a malady which must be cured. But the remedies proposed by the economists are ineffectual for this purpose

And nevertheless, there is a progress in the condition of the classes to which you belong, an historical, continuous progress, which has overcome very different obstacles You were once slaves: then you were serfs. now you are wage-earners. You have freed yourselves, from slavery, from serfdom, why should you not free yourselves from the yoke of wages, and become free producers, master of the whole value of what you produce? Why should you not by your own doing and the assistance of society, which has sacred duties towards its members, peacefully accomplish the greatest and most beautiful revolution that can be conceived-a revolution which should make labour the economic basis of human fellowship, the fruits of labour the basis of property, and should thus gather together under one single law of equilibrium between production and consumption, without distinction of classes, and without the tyrannic predominance of one of the elements of labour over another, all the children of our common Mother, our Country 2

A sense of social duty towards the working-classes, such as I have been pointing out, and been slowly growing in men's minds—thanks chiefly to the republican propaganda—and thus insuring the popular revolution of the future, when in the last thirty years certain schools of thinkers arose, in France especially, mostly good men and friends of the people, but carnied away you an excessive love of system and by individual vanity Under the name of socialism these men introduced exclusive and eaugeristed doctrines, often antigomistic to the wealth already gained by other classes, and consumeally influences distributed by the commercial profile class. An importance distributed by the class of profiles of the classes, and the different orders of citizens, they threw the social question into the background and split up the republican camp in two In France the first effect of this distrust and terror was a more easy triumph for the cosp delia.

I cannot now examine one by one with you these different systems, which were called Sansimonism, Fourierism, Communism, or some other name Founded almost all of them upon ideas good in themselves and accepted by all who belong to the Faith of Progress, their promulgators spoiled or frustrated them by the false or tyrannic methods by which they proposed to apply them. And it is necessary that I should briefly point out to you in what their errors consisted, because the promises held out to the people by these systems are so dazzling that they might easily allure you, and you would run a risk by embracing them of retarding that future emancipation which you will certainly obtain, and before long It is true-and this should be enough to awaken a strong doubt in your minds—that when circumstances called any of these men to power they did not even attempt a practical application of their own doctrines, giants of audacity in their writings, they retreated when confronted by the reality of things

If you examine these systems attentively some day and remember the fundamental ideas which I have been pointing out to you, and the characters inseparable from human nature, you will find that they all violate the Law of Progress, the manner in which this is fulfilled in humanity, and one or other of the faculties which form

Progress is accomplished step by step, through laws which no human power can break, by detelopment, by the perpetual medification of the elements which manifest the activity of life. Men have often in certain epochs, in certain countries, and under the influence of certain prejudices and certain errors, given the name of elements, of conditions of social life, to things which have no root in nature, but only in the conventions and customs of a mistaken society, and which disappear after that particular epoch or beyond the boundaries of those particular countries. But you can discorer what are the true elements inseparable from human nature, by interrogating—as I told you elsewhere—the instincts of your souls and then testing by the traditions of all ages and of all countries these instincts of yours, whether they be such as have been always the insuitors of Humanity And those things which an inhorn voice (and the great voice by of Humanity) indicates as constituent elements of life have 'e to be modified, and developed continuously from epoch to epoch, but can never be abolished

this work, property is also one

The principle, the origin, of property is rooted in human nature itself, and represents the necessities of that material life which it is the duty of the individual to maintain as a life which it is the duty of the individual to maintain is called to transform, to improve, and to govern the moral and intelletional world, so also he is called to transform, to improve, and to govern the physical world by means of material abovern. And property is the token of the fulfillment of that mission and represents the amount of unext by which the individual has transformed, developed, and increased the productive forces of nature.

Property is therefore eternal in its frinaple, and you find it existing and protected throughout the whole existence of Humanity But the methods by which property is governed are subject to change, and destined, like every other manifestation of human life, to obey the law of Progress. Those who, finding property already established in a particular form, declare that form to moviolate and oppose all attempts to transform it, deny Progress itself, one need only open two volumes of the provided of the property and those who, because they find it badly constituted at a certain people, declare that it must be abolished, and wiped out of the social system, deny an element of human nature, and could they ever have their way they would only succeed in retarding Progress by mutilating Life Property would inevitably reappear a short time after and probably in the same form which it had at the time of its abolition

~ Property is hadly constituted at the present day because its actual distribution originated, generally speaking, in conquest, in the violence by which in remote times certain invading peoples possessed themselves of lands and fruits of labour not their own Property is badly constituted because the basis of the division between proprietor and workmen of the fruits of a work accomplished by both together does not rest upon a just and equal rate, proportioned to the work Property is badly constituted because by conferring on those who possess it political and legislative notts which are denied to the working-men, it tends to be the monopoly of a few and maccessible to the greater number. Property is badly constituted because the system of taxation is badly constituted and tends to maintain a privilege of wealth in the proprietor, while oppressing the poorer classes and depriving them of every possibility of saving But if, instead of correcting evils and slowly modifying the constitution of property. you sought to abolish it, you would suppress a source of wealth, of emulation, and of activity, and you would be 'like the savage who to gather the fruit cuts down the tree It is not necessary to abolish property because only a few possess it now, but the way must be opened for the many to acquire it

We must go back to the principle which makes it legitimate, and so arrange that labour alone shall be able to produce it.

Society must be directed towards a more equable basis of remuneration between the proprietor or capitalist and the working-man

The system of taxiton must be altered, so that it shall not touch incomes which only suffice for existence and shall leave the poor man the power of accumulating savings and of thus gradually acquining property. And to bring this to pass, the privileges conceded to property must be suppressed and all must be allowed to contribute to the work of legislation

Now, all these things are possible and just By eclucating yourselves and organising yourselves to demand them insistently and to resolve to have them, you could obtain them, but by seeking the abolition of property you would seek an impossibility, you would do an injustice to those who have gained it by their own labour, and you would diminish production instead of increasing it.

The abolition of individual property is nevertheless the remedy proposed by many of the secasities systems of which I am speaking, and especially by Communism Others go further; and finding the religious conception, the conception of government, and the conception of country flaisfied by religious errors, by class privilege, and by the egoism of dynasties, they demand the abolition of all religion, all government, and all nationality. This is the proceeding of children or of brabrarians. Would it not be as reasonable, since maldades are often engendered by corrupt air, to seek the suppression of every resonable gas?

But you need no confutation from me of the error of those who in the name of liberty wish to found nanezby and to abolish seastly so as to leave only the individual and his rights My whole work is directed against that wicked dream, which denies progress, duties, human brotherhood, the solidarity of nations, everything that you and I venerate. But the design of those who, conlining themselves to the economic question, demand the abolition of individual property and the establishment of communism, touches the opposite extreme, demes the manifoldad, dancies theirly, closes the way to progress, and, so to speak, petrifies society.

The general formula of communism is as follows, the possession of all the means of production, that is, lands, capital, machinery, and all instruments of labour, etc., shall be concentrated in the State, the State shall assign his share of work to each, and shall adjust the recompense, some say, with absolute equality, and others say an proportion to his needs. Such an extension, and the possible of the possible

Equality is thus secured, they say How? - Equality in the distribution of labour? It is impossible. Work is of different kinds, and cannot be reckoned by its duration or by the amount performed in an hour, but by the difficulty, by the lesser or greater unpleasantness of the work, by the expenditure of vitality which it involves, by the benefit which it confers on society How can you reckon the equality between an hour passed in a coal mine, or in purifying the corrupt water of a marsh, and an hour spent in a spinning factory? The impossibility of such a calculation has suggested to some of the founders of these systems the idea of making every one perform in turn a certain amount of labour in every branch of useful industry. an absurd remedy which would make good production impossible, while it could not succeed in suppressing the inequality between the weak and the strong, between the man of intellectual capacity and one slow of intellect. petween the man of lymphatic temperament and the man of nervous temperament Work easy and agreeable to one is laborious and difficult to another. Equality in the distribution of products? It is impos-

Equality in the distribution of products? It is impossible Either equality would have to be absolute and would constitute an immense myusice, as it would not distinguish between the different needs resulting fion difference of organism, nor between the powers and capacities acquired from a sense of duty, and those received, without any ment, from nature. Or else the inequality must be relative and calculated according to different needs, and not taking account of individual production, it would violate those rights of property which ought to belong to the labourer as the fruit of his labour

Then who would be the judge to decide upon the needs of every individual? The State?

Working men, my Brothers, are you disposed to accept masters of the form and masters of the common property masters of the mind in consequence of an exclusive education, masters of the body from possessing the power of determining your work, your capacity, and your needs? Is not this a return to ancient slavery? Mould not these masters, representing such great interests, be carried away by the theory of interest and be seduced by the minense power concentrated in their hands into founding again the hereditary dictatorship of the ancient caster?

No. communism would not produce equality among the men of labour, it would not increase productionwhich is the great necessity of the present day-because as soon as the means of life are secured human nature -in the average man at least-is satisfied and the incentive to an increase of production, to be diffused among all the members of society, becomes so small that it is not enough to stimulate his faculties, 1 production would not be improved, there would be no incitement to progress in invention, nor could progress ever be assisted by the uncertain and unintelligent collective direction of the general organisation the evils which afflict the sons of the people the only remedy of Communism is protection from hunger Now. cannot this be done, cannot the working man's right to life and to work be secured without upsetting the whole social order, without rendering production sterile. impeding progress, abolishing the liberty of the individual, and chaining him down in a tyrannic organisation?

The remedy for your present condition cannot be found in any arbitrary general organisation built up according to the plan of some particular mind, contradicting the universally adopted bases of civil existence and established all at once by means of decrees "We are not here below to create Humanity, but to continue it. we can and we must modify its constituent elements and order them better, but we cannot suppress them Humanity rebels and always will rebel against any such attempt... Time spent over these illusions would therefore he time wasted. Nor can the remedy he found in an increase of wages imposed by the governing authority without other changes which would increase capital An increase in the money spent on wages-that is, an increase in the cost of production-would involve a rise in the price of products, a diminution of consumption, and consequently less employment for the working-man

It is not to be found in anything that would annul liberty-consecration of labour and spur to effort, nor in anything which would diminish capital-instrument of labour and of production

The remedy for your present condition is the union of

spital and labour in the same hands

When Society shall recognise no distinction beyond that of producers and consumers, or rather when every man shall be a producer and a consumer-when the entire fruits of labour, instead of being distributed between that series of middle-men who, beginning with the capitalish and descending to the retail seller, often heighten the price of the product 50 per cent, shall be retained by labour-the permanent causes of poverty will disappear from your midst Your future lies in your emancipation from the exactions of capital, arbiter to-day of a production in which it has no actual share-

I speak of your material and moral future Look round you Wherever you find capital and labour united in the same hands-wherever the profits of labour are divided between all who labour, in proportion to the increase of those profits and to the amount by which each workman has helped in the collective work -- you find a decrease of poverty and at the same time an increase of morality In the Canton of Zurich, in the Engadine, and in many other parts of Switzerland where the peasant is the proprietor, and land, capital, and labour are united in the same individual-in Norway, in Flanders, in Eastern Frisia, in Holstein in the German Palatinate, in Belgium, in the Island of Guernsey on the English coast-there may be seen a prosperity comparatively superior to that of all the other parts of Europe where the land does not belong to the cultivator A race of husbandmen noted for honesty, dignity, and independence, and for their frank and sincere manners, people these countries The habits of the miners of Cornwall in England and of the American whalers who trade with China, among whom participation in the profits of the enterprise obtains, are recognised by official documents to be better than those of workers subject to the system of payment by a predetermined rate of wages

Association of labour, division of the profits of labour—that is, of the profits resulting from the sale of the products—among the labourers, in proportion to the amount and the value of the work accomplished this is the social future. In this is contained the secret of your emancipation. You were slaust once, then setty, then trage-suriers; before long you shall be, if you will it, free producers and brothers in Association!

Association, free and voluntary, and organised on certain bases by yourselves, among men who know, love, and esteem one another, not compulsory association, imposed by the governing authority and ordered without regard for individual affections and ties, and treating men as so many machines for production, rather than as beings of free and spontaneous will.

Association administered in a spirit of republican brotherhood by your own delegates and from which you shall be able to withdraw yourselves if you wish, not subject to the despoism of the State and of a hierarchy arbitrarily constituted and ignorant of your needs and antitudes.

Association of groups formed according to your own tendencies, not, as the authors of the systems to which I have called your attention would have, of all the men belonging to a given branch of industrial or agricultural

activity. The concentration of all the individuals in the State, or even in a single city, engaged in the same craft, in one insigle individuals in solid again to the old tyrannical monopoly of the Corporations. It would make the producer arbiter of prices to the injury of the consumer, would give a legal form to the oppression of immorties, would deprive a dissatisfied workman of every possibility of getting work, and would suppress the necessity of progress by extinguishing all rivalry in work, all stimulus to insention

Association has been attempted in the last twenty years, first timidly and in unfavourable circumstances in France, then in England and in Belgium, and has been crowned with success wherever it was undertaken with energy, resolve, and the spirit of self-sacrifice It contains the secret of an entire social transformation. a transformation which, in virtue of your traditions and of the initiative in social progress which you have always possessed, should be accomplished first in Italy this transformation, emancipating you from the slavery of wages, would at the same time give new life to production, to the advantage of all classes, and would improve the economic condition of the country. Under the present system the aim of the capitalist is usually to amass as much wealth as he can in order to retire from the arena of work, under the system of association you would tend instead to secure the continuity of work. that is, of production At present the head, the director of the work, who owes his fortune not to any special aptitude, but to his possession of capital, is often improvident, rash, or incapable, an association directed by delegates, watched over by all its members, would not run any risks from such defects To-day labour is often directed towards the production of superfluities, in consequence of capinious and unjust inequality in the payment workers abound in one branch of activity and are waning in another, the working-man limited to a fixed wage has no motive for devoting to his work all the zeal of which he is capable and all the activity with which he might increase or improve his output Association, it is evident, would remedy this and other causes of irregularity and of inferiority in production

Liberty to withdraw oneself, without doing harm to the association, equality of all members in the election of an executive appointed for a given time-or better. subject to removal, freedom of admission, subsequently to the foundation of the association, without the obligation of putting in capital, but with permission to supply it, for the good of the common fund, by a deduction from the profits of the first years, indivisibility and perpetuity of the collective capital, remuneration for all, equal to the necessities of life, distribution of the tools and instruments of labour, according to the quantity and quality of each one's work,-these are the general principles upon which you must found your associations if you are willing to do a work involving present sacrifice but future gain for the class to which you belong. Each of these principles, that especially which concerns the perpetuity of collective capital-the pledge of your emancipation and your link with future generations-needs a chapter to itself. But a special study of working men's associations does not enter into the plan of my present work Perhaps if God allows me yet a few years of life I shall do it separately, out of my love for you. Meanwhile be sure that these rules which I have laid down for you here are the fruit of deep and earnest study, and deserve your attentive consideration.

But the capital? The capital with which to start th association, where is it to come from?

This is a grave question, and I cannot treat of it here a

I should wish But I will point out to you briefly you own duty and the duty of others The primary source of that capital must be in your selves, in your savings, in your spirit of self-sacrifice I know the position of most of you, but to some th good fortune of regular or better-paid employmen affords the possibility of collecting, by the carefu economy of eighteen or twenty combined together, th small sum sufficient for starting the work on your ow account. And the consciousness of fulfilling a solem duty and of deserving your desired emancipation ough to sustain you in this economy I could tell you o industrial associations, now financially powerful, which were started here in England by the payment of a penn a day by a certain number of working-men. I could reneat to you many stories of sacrifice heroically endured in France and elsewhere by bands of working-men, who are now possessors of considerable capital There i scarcely any difficulty which a firm will, sustained by th

Each of you might contribute by means of your savings a little something to the small primary fund, in money or in material or in implements. You might be able, if your conduct were such as to wm confidence and esteem, to collect small loans from relations or fellow workmen, who would become merely shareholders in the association, and would not receive interest on their loans except on the profits of the enterprise In many of your industries, in which the price of the raw material is very little, the capital required to start work independently is inconsiderable If you are determined to get it you will find a way And it will be better for you if the formation of this small capital is all your own, gained by the sweat of your brow, or through the credit which you have acquired by working well As those nations best preserve freedom who have conquered it with their blood. so your associations will draw a larger and steadier profit from the capital collected by long hours of work and by economy than from that derived from any other source. those which formed their original capital by their own

But although I counsel you to self-sacrifice because I love you truly and do not with servile adulation flatter or make light of any possible weaknesses in you, that does not lessen the duty of others The men whom circumstances have provided with wealth must understand this, they must understand that emancipation is a part of the Providential Design, and that it will be inevitably accomplished, either with them or against them Many of these men, and especially those of republican faith, do understand this, and among these, if you give them proofs of determined will and honest intelligence, you will find help in your enterprises. They can-and as soon as they perceive that the desire for association is not the caprice of an hour, but the faith of a majority among you, they will-give you facilities for obtaining credit, either by advances, or by founding banks which will give credit on the security of the future work of a collective body of working-men, or perhaps by admitting you to a share in the profits of their undertakings, an intermediate stage between the present and the future by which you might be able to obtain the small amount of capital necessary for an independent association. In

Belgiuta more than elsewhere institutions such as I have described already exist under the name of Banks of Anticipation, or of People's Banks In Scotland many banks will give credit to any man of known probity who pledges his honour and offers as his security another man of equally proved honesty And the admission of the workmen to a share in the profits is a plan adopted with singular success by several employers

CONCLUSION

Bur the State, the Government-an institution legitimate only when founded upon a mission of education and of progress not yet understood-has a solemn debt towards you, a debt which it will easily fulfil if ever there is a really National Government, the Government of a free and united People The Government will then be able to bestow assistance of many kinds upon the People, which will solve the social problem without spoliation, without violence, without laying hands on the wealth previously acquired by the citizens, without rousing that antagonism between class and class which is unjust, immoral, and fatal to the nation and which visibly retards the progress of the French in the present day

Powerful assistance might be given in the following ways ---

The exercise of moral influence in favour of the associations by the publicly manifested approval of the Government agents, by frequent discussion of their fundamental principle in the Representative Assembly, and by legislation granted to all voluntary associations formed upon the basis described above

Improvement in ways of communication and abolition of whatever now hinders the free transport of produce

The institution of public storehouses and depôts, which when the approximate value of the consigned goods had been ascertained would grant to the associations a document or bond similar to a bank bill and admissible for circulation and discount, so as to make it possible for the association to continue its work without being strangled by the necessity of an immediate sale at any price

The concession of public works to the associations upon the same terms as those granted to individual enterprise.

The secularisation or

The secularisation or appropriation of ecclesiastic possessions-a step which there is no advantage in discussing now, but which is mevitable when once the nation assumes a mission of education and of collective progress-will place in the hands of the State a vast sum of wealth Now suppose that to this is added the value represented by land fertile and capable of cultivation, but hitherto unreclaimed. the value represented by the profits of the railways and . of other public undertakings, of which the administration should be centred in the State; the value represented by the landed property belonging to the Communes. the value represented by collateral inheritances, which beyond the fourth degree ought to revert to the State, and the value of other sources of wealth which it is unnecessary to enumerate Suppose that with all this immense accumulation of wealth a NATIONAL FUND was formed, to be consecrated to the intellectual and economic progress of the whole country. Why should not a considerable part of this fund be transformed, with the necessary precautions to prevent its being squandered.

This property belongs legally to the Commune, morally to the needy members of the Commune. It is not meant that it should be taken from the Commune, but that it should be conserted to the poor of each commune by being constituted under the direction of elective Communal Commission and the landscape and the communication of the communication of nito a fund of credit, to be distributed at a rate of interest of one and a half or of two per cent, to the voluntary working-men's associations, formed according to the principles indicated above and offering the security of merality and of apacity? That capital ought to be sacred to the work of the future also and not of a single generation only. But the wast scale of the operations would ensure compensation for inevitable losses from time to time.

The distribution of this credit ought to be carried out, not by the Government nor by a Central National Bank, but by local Banks administered by elective Communal Councils and with the supervision of the Central Govern-Without lessening the actual wealth of the various classes, and without allowing one class alone to monopolise the revenue from the taxation which is levied on all the citizens, and ought therefore to be devoted to the benefit of all, the series of measures suggested here, by diffusing credit, increasing and improving production, compelling a graduated diminution in the rate of interest and trusting to the zeal and the interest of all the producers to insure the progress and continuity of work, would replace the limited sum of wealth now concentrated in a few hands and ill-directed, by the rich nation, manager of its own production and its own consumption. And this, Italian Working-men, is your future You can hasten it Win your Country! Establish a popular Government which shall represent its collective life, its mission, its thought Organise yourselves in a vast universal League of the People, so that your voice shall be the voice of nullions and not of a few individuals only You have Truth and Justice on your side the Nation will listen to you

But beware! Believe the words of a man who has studied for thirty years the course of events in Europe, and has seen the holiest and most useful enterprises fail, at the moment of success, through the immorality of men'you will not succeed except by ground; belter your-selves, you will not win the exercise of your rights except by desoring them, through self-scarnifice, industry, and love If you seek them in the name of a duty fulfilled or to be fulfilled, you will obtain them, but if you seek them in the name of egoism or of some right to well-terng taught you by materialists, you will only achieve momentary trumphs, followed by tremendous dis-illusionments. Those who speak to you in the name of realt-leang, of material happiness, will betray you.—They also seek their own well-being, and to obtain it they will unite with you, as with an element of strength, while they contained well-being by your aid, they will abandon you that they may enough the production in transullity. This is the history of the last half-century, and the name of this half-century is materialism And it is a history of sorrow and of bloods. I have seen them-the men who denied God, religion, the virtue of duty and of self sacrifice, and spoke only in the name of the right to happiness and enjoyment-fighting boldly with the words People and Liberty on their lips, and mingling themselves with us men of the new faith. who rashly received them into our ranks. As soon as an opportunity was offered to them, through a victory or a cowardly compromise, of securing comfort and pleasure for themselves, they deserted us, and became our bitter enemies the day after A very few years of danger and privation were enough to weary them Being unconscious of a law of duty, and without faith in a mission imposed upon men by a Power supreme over all, why should they have persisted in sacrifice until the end of life? And with deep grief I have seen the sons of the people, who had been educated in materialism by such philosophers as these, prove false to their mission, false to the future, false to their country and to themselves, beguiled by the stupid, immoral hope of perhaps finding material well-being in the caprices and the interests of tyranny I saw the working-men of France stand by, indifferent spectators of the coup d'état of the 2nd of December. because all social questions had been reduced for them to a question of material prosperity, and they deluded themselves into the belief that the promises, artfully circulated among them by the man who had extinguished the liberty of their country, would become facts To-day they lament their lost bleety, and have not acquired the promised acellébuing. No! I tell you with profound conviction, that without God, without belief in a Law, without morality, without the power of self-sacrifice, and by straying from the right path in the wake of men who have neither faith, nor worship of truth, nor the life of apostles, nor anything beyond the vanity of their own systems, you will never succeed. You may bring about insurrections, but never the tine, the great Revolution which you and I invoke, that Revolution, if it is not an illusion of egosits, spurred on by revenge, is a work of relizion

To improve yourselves and others-this must be the first aim and the supreme hope of every reform, of every social change The lot of a man is not altered by renovating and embellishing the house in which he lives, where only the body of a slave breathes, and not the soul of a man, all reforms are useless the neat dwelling. luxuriously furnished, is a whited sepulchre, nothing else. You will never induce the society to which you belong to substitute the system of association for that of wages, except by proving that your association will be an instrument of improved production and of collective prospenty And you can only prove this by showing yourselves capable of founding and maintaining the association by honesty, mutual kindliness, capacity for sacrifice, and love of work To progress you must show vourselves canable of progressing

Three things are sacred Tradition, Progress, Association "I believe"—thus I wrote twenty years ago—"in the immense voice of God which the centuries transmit to me through the universal tradition of Humanity, and it tells me that the Family, the Nation, and Humanity are the three spheres within which the human radiculsual has to labour for the common end, for the moral perfecting of himself and of others, or rather of himself through others and for others. It tells methat property is designed to manifest the material activity of the individual, the part which he takes in the transformation of the physical world, as the right to vote ought to manifest the part which he takes in the administration of the political world. It tells me that the ment or dement of the individual before God depends upon his use of these rights in those spheres of activity. It tells me that all these things, being elements of human nature, are transformed and modified continuously as they approach ever more nearly to the ideal which our souls dimly apprehend, but that they can never be destroyed, and that the dreams of communism, of the abolition and absorption of the individual in the social whole, have never been more than accidental and transitory phenomena in the life of the human race, appearing n every great intellectual and moral crisis, and are ncapable of realisation except upon a minute scale, as in he Christian Convents I believe in the eternal progress of the life in God's creatures, and in the progress of Thought and of Action, not only in the man of the past, out in the man of the future. I believe that it is not of so much importance to determine the form of future progress, as to open, by means of a truly religious ducation, every path of progress to men and to render hem capable of accomplishing it And I believe that nan cannot be made better, more worthy of love, more noble, more divine-which is our aim and and upon earthby heaping upon him physical enjoyments and by setting before him as the object of life that irony which is called happiness I believe in Association as the sole means which we possess of accomplishing Progress, not only because it multiplies the action of the productive forces. out because it brings into closer relations all the various nanifestations of the human soul, and puts the life of the ndividual into communion with the collective life And I cnow that Association can never be fruitful unless it exists among free individuals, among free nations capable of realising their solemn mission I believe that man ought to be able to eat and live without having all the hours of his existence absorbed by material labour, that he ought to have time for developing his superior faculties

I listen with terror to those voices which tell us: mark aim in life is self-preservation, enjoyment is his right, because I know that such maxims can only create egoists and that they have been in France and elsewhere, and threaten to be in Italy, the destruction of every noble idea, of all martyr spint, and every pledge of future great ness

"That which saps the vitality of Humanity in the present day is the want of a common fauth, of a thought shared by all and remning earth and heaven, the Universe and Good. Italian Working-men, my Brothers, shun this step On shunning it depends your juture

A solemn mission is yours to prove that we are all sons of God and brothers in Him. You can only do this by improving yourselves and fulfilling your Duty

I have pointed out to you, to the best of my power, what your Duty is And the chief and most essential duty of all is to your Country To secure the freedom and unity of your Country is your duty, and it is also a necessity The encouragement and the measures of which I have spoken can only be the work of a Free and United Country The amelioration of your social condition can only result from your participation in the political life of the nation Without the franchise you will never find true representatives of your aspirations and needs. Without a popular government which, seated in Rome, shall formulate the Italian Compact, founded upon the common consent of the nation, and directed to the progress of all the citizens of the State, there is no hope of better things for you That day in \ which, following the example of the French socialists, you should senarate the social from the political question and should say We can emancipate ourselves whatever may be the form of constitution which rules the Country. you would yourselves seal the perpetuity of your social servitude...

And I will point out to you, in bidding you farewell. another Duty, not less solemn than that which obliges us to found a Free and United Nation

Your emancipation can only be founded on the triumph of one principle, the unity of the Human Family To-day, half of the human family, the half from which we seek inspiration and consolation, the half to which is entrusted the first education of our children, is, by a singular contradiction, declared civilly, politically, and socially unequal, and is excluded from this unity It is for you who seek your emancipation, in the name of religious truth, to protest in every way and upon every occasion against this negation of unity

The emancipation of woman should be always coupled by you with the emancipation of the working-man. It will give your work the consecration of a universal? truth

January 6th, 1816

THERE IS a charge too often brought against those who, like us, love to dwell on political generalities, and insist at length on principles, the charge, that we pay little attention to material interests, that we are apt to sacrifice or neglect facts for what they are pleased to call abstract theories We are told . "You are dreamers. What use to us are all your discussions about principles which can only mature slowly, and which you can only address to a small minority of intellects? At the present moment we want facts and facts alone Come down from the lofty sphere where we are not disposed to follow you, to the firm ground of practical work. Leave generalities descend to particulars Speak of what we can see, and what is palpable to the senses. Face the question of material interests, would you forsooth profess to make the masses progress by virtue of mere abstractions? Yonder are people dving for lack of food, men who are hungry and athirst, men who have not wherewith to clothe themselves in winter All your theories of a social polity, of Humanity, of a unifying and religious faith, will never renew their strength, never clothe their nakedness Proclaim those needs openly Teach the proletariat its rights Uncloak one by one the crimes, the injustice, the infamy of our rulers Denounce every act of authority that injures any interest whatever, that infringes a single right Fight, Fight Shout Liberty in the ears of the People Revolt is the principle of the century Then guide it In the stormy atmosphere that surrounds us, amid the political tempest that pursues and presses upon us on all sides, do not cheat yourselves into thinking that your message of peace, your weak speech of religion and love, will be heeded. Let the Future and its Faith alone The Present demands all our thought Consecrate yourselves to it, and do not come and weary us with your mysticism and spiritualistic beliefs."

They who speak thus are convinced that it is enough to crush us if they call us dreamers And nevertheless those very men are attacked by disconragement they are silent-or if they speak, they curse A hundred times they have thought to achieve their purpose, as often have they been compelled to start afresh All they say has been already said, all they do has been already done. - but never to any purpose All the war of criticism, all the opposition of detail and of practical reform that they urge on us to-day has been experimented to the uttermost in France And where is France to-day?\ She has fallen headlong from one wreck to another from the Revolution to the Empire, from the Empire to the Bourbon Monarchy, from Charles X to Louis Philippe . What has she gained by the change? What difference can you see between the censorship of the first Restoration and the September Press Laws ?

"The blood-stained wounds of the proletariat have been exposed A thousand times have men counted the victims of the deep social inequality that insults the Cross of Christ-

Yes, and the poor man, the workman, has learnt to plead his cause before the tribunal of frightened Europe, his indictment, summarised in two words, terrible in their energy-Death or Work people of workmen has protested against the present division of labour, against the greed of the privileged classes. What has been the result? What has been done? Have any remedies been track, or any great unprovements made? To the producer's cry of Death or Work, the unproducture and speculative class replied—Death *The cannon has thundered, All this opposition, so inteptid, so indefatigable in the petty skirmashes for interests and rights, looked on at the butchery with their arms at rest. Not in all France did a single cry answer the cry of angustiof the Lyons workmen! Why is this?

Thanks to the writers of a whole century,-thanks to the martyrs of many centuries,-Liberty and Equality as principles are to-day admitted in the series of social axioms Independence is universally recognised as the fairest jewel in a People's crown. The right not to be oppressed, or maimed, or tortured by the tyranny of the few, or by foreign invasion, is enshrined in the hearts of all as a sacred imprescriptible right. But does this advance us further? Not only in Italy, and Poland. and Germany, but everywhere, material interests are openly violated, and yet we all are conscious of our rights Ask whom you will in those unhappy countries You will everywhere encounter hatred of the Russian and the Austrian, a clear desire for freedom, the consciousness of right that would justify insurrection. the conviction of the real advantages that would result for future generations \ And yet they suffer in silence, they bow their necks to the yoke, they do not strive to break it Why is this?

Because between oppression and insurrection it is necessary to pass through gendarmes, prisons, and the agallows. Because to face all that, the consciousness of the fact is not enough, they must feel their duty to destroy it. Because the mere constant does not suffice to begin a struggle, that must break forth as the manifestation of a faith.

There were men who preached insurrection to those peoples, who said to them, "You have material interests, those interests are trodden under foot, see that you provide a remedy You have rights, those rights are violated, see that you assert free play for them " For this they conspired. But tyranny was watching It shed their blood before the conspiracy was ripe . it sent a few heads rolling at the conspirators' feet Then they stepped back A single chance of death outweighed a thousand chances of success . They said, " Our rights are valuable, and we should dearly wish to win them . but first of all rights is the right to live The interest of our own life surpasses all other possible material interests. It embraces and outweighs them all. Without life we can have neither rights, nor well-being, nor riches, nor material improvement. Why should we hazard our life for an uncertain stake? Where should we find a recompense?" Such were their words, and if we refuse to leave the circle of material calculations. we must own they are consistent Two-thirds at least of popular Revolutions only benefit the succeeding generation The generation that made them is nearly always condemned to mark with its own dead the road of progress for its successor. Itself can never enjoy the result of its travail Now, what theory of maternal interests, what proof of midwdaul rights, could argue a law of self-scriftee, or matrydom, if matrydom be the goal that awaits us? Analyse, compare, phase by phrase, all the doctrines of the utilitations, you will never harmonise with them the sacrifice of life. "Matrydom is folly to a People that has no stimulus outside maternal interests, to their inrelligence Christ has lost all meaning.

telligence Christ has lost all meaning.

For us, we maintain that there has never been a single great Revolution that has not had its source outside material interests. We know of rots, of popular insurrections, but of none that has been crowned with success, or transformed into a Revolution.

Every Revolution is the work of a principle which has been accepted as a basis of faith Whether it invoke Nationality, Liberty, Equality, or Religion, it always fulfils itself in the name of a Principle, that is to say, of a great truth, which being recognised and approved by the majority of the inhabitants of a country, constitutes a common belief, and sets before the masses a new arm, while Authority misrepresents or rejects it A Revolution, violent or peaceful, includes a negation and an affilmation; the negation of an existing order of things, the affirmation of a new order to be substituted for it A Revolution proclaims that the State is rotten, that its machinery no longer meets the needs of the greatest number of the citizens, that its institutions are powerless to direct the general movement, that popular and social thought has passed beyond the vital principle of those institutions, that the new phase in the development of the national faculties finds neither expression nor representation in the official constitution of the country, and that it must therefore create one for itself This the Revolution does create. Since its task is to increase and not diminish the nation's patrimony, it violates neither the truths that the majority possess, nor the rights they hold sacred, but it reorganises everything on a new basis, it gathers and harmonises round the new principle all the elements and forces of the country. it gives a unity of direction towards the new aim, to all those tendencies which before were scattered in the pursuit of different aims Then the Revolution has done its work -

We recognise no other meaning in Revolutions II a Revolution did not imply a general recognisation by virtue of a social principle, if it did not remove a discord in the elements of a State, and place harmony in its steed, if it did not secure a moral unity, so far from declaring ourselves Revolutionists, we should believe it our duty to oppose the revolutionary movement with all our power

Without the purpose hinted at above, there may be nots, and at times victorious insurrections, but no Revolutions. You will have changes of men and administration, one caste succeeding to another, one dynastic

130 branch ousting the other This necessitates retreat; a slow reconstruction of the past, which the insurrection had suddenly destroyed, the gradual re establishmen under new names of the old order of things, which the neonle had risen to destroy Societies have such need of unity that if they miss it in insurrection they turn back to a restoration. Then there is new discontent a new struggle, a new explosion France has prover it abundantly In 1830 she performed miracles o daring and valour for a negation she rose to destroy without positive beliefs, without any definite organic pupose, and thought she had won her end when she cancelled the old principle of legitimacy "She descended into that abyss which insurrection alone can never fill and because she did not recognise how needful is some principle of reconstruction, she finds herself to-day, six years after the July Revolution, five years after the day. of November, two years after the days of April, well on her way to a thorough restoration. We cite the case of France because she is expected to give political lessons, hopes, and sympathies, and convincingly

because France is the modern nation in which theorie of pure reaction founded on suspicion, on individua right, on liberty alone, are most militant, therefore the practical consequences of her mistakes are shown mos But twenty other instances might b cited For fifty years, every movement which, in it turn, was successful as an insurrection, but failed as revolution, has proven how everything depends on the presence or absence of a principle of reconstruction Wherever, in fact, individual rights are exercised with out the influence of some great thought that is commo to all, wherever individual interests are not harmonise by some organisation which is directed by a positive ruling principle, and by the consciousness of a commo aim, there must exist a tendency for some to usur others' rights In a society like ours, where a division into classes, call them what you will, still exists in ful strength, every right is bound to clash with anothe right, envious and mistrustful of it, every interes naturally conflicts with an opposing interest the landlord's with the peasant's; the manufacturer's or capitalist's with the workman's All through Europe-since equality, however accepted in theory, has been rejected in practice, and the sum of social wealth has accumulated in the hands of a small number of men, while the masses gain but a mere pittance by their relentless toil -- it is a cruel irony, it gives inequality a new lease of life, if you establish unrestricted liberty, and tell men they are free, and bid them use their rights

A social sphere must have its centre, a centre to the individualities which jostle which each other inside it, a centre to all the scattered rays with diffuse and waste their light and heat. Now, the theory which bases the social structure on individual anterests cannot supply this centre The absence of a centre, or the selection among opposing interests of that which has the most vigorous life, means either anaichy or privilege -that is, either barren strife or the germ of aristocracy. under whatever name it disguises itself this is the parting of the ways which it is impossible to avoid -Is this what we want when we invoke a Revolution. since a Revolution is indispensable to reorganise our nationality? -Do we want to condemn ourselves to ceaseless eddying in the whirlpool where France and Europe have tossed for half a century? Do we want to be always making and unmaking, and be still in a provisional dispensation, be still uncertain of the morrow? Do we want strife, or peace and harmony? This is the whole question

For us there is no doubt To find a centre for all the many interests we must rise to a region above them all, independent of them all. To close a provisional dispensation and organise a peaceful future, we must reconnect that centre with something, eternal as Truth, progressive as its development in the sphere of facts To prevent the clash of individualities we must find an atm common to all, and direct ourselves towards it To make it easier for all to reach it we must consolidate and associate the forces of all. What else is association but a conception that makes for unity? And how can such a conception be understood without a principle around which it may revolve?

We are, therefore, driven to the sphere of principles.
We must revive belief in them, we must fulfil a work of faith. The logic of things demands it-

TIT

Principles alone are constructive. Ideals are never translated into facts without the general recognition of some strong belief Great things are never done except by the rejection of individualism and a constant sacrifice of self to the common progress. Now, selfsacrifice is the sense of Duty in action. And the sense of Duty cannot spring from individual interests, but postulates the knowledge of a superior, inviolable Law. 'Every law rests on a principle otherwise it is arbitrary and its violation is permissible. This principle must be freely accepted by everybody otherwise the law is despotic and its violation is a duty. The application of principle lies in a life in conformity with law. To discover, to study, to preach the prinaple which shall be the basis of the social law of the country and of the times in which he lives, should be the aim of every man who directs his thought to any political organisation Fasth in that principle is the parent of effective and lasting work. The isolated and barren knowledge of individual interests can only lead to the isolated and barren knowledge of individual right. And the knowledge of individual right will, where that right is denied. lead in its turn to discontent, opposition, strife, sometimes insurrection, but insurrection which, like that of Lyons, results only in a bitterer hostility between the classes which compose society. Whenever, therefore, we desire to do one of those great deeds called Revolutions, we must always return to the knowledge and preaching of principles The true instrument of the progress of the peoples is to be sought in the moral factor material interests, the importance of industrial victories, and the labours that won them? Do we preach principles for principles sake, faith for faith's sake, as the romantic school of literature to-day preaches art for art's sake.

God forbid! We do not suppress the commuta factor we believe, on the contrary, that it is distincted in the society of the future to admit an ever-increasing extension of the principle of establish, and to incorporate the fruitful principle of estaciation. But we subordinate the contomic to the novael factor, because if withdrawn from its controlling influence, dissociated from principles, and abandoned to the theories of individualism which govern it to-day, it would result in brutish egoissm, in perpetual strife between men who should be brothers, in the expression of the appetites of the human species, whilst it ought rather to represent on the ascending curve.

expression of man's industrial mission -No, we do not neglect material interests on the contrary, we reject as imperfect and irreconcilable with the needs of the age every doctrine which does not include them, or regards them as less important than they really are We believe that to every stage of progress there should be a corresponding positive improvement in the material condition of the people, and this successive improvement, in a certain manner, verifies for us the progress made But we maintain that material interests cannot be developed alone, that they are dependent on principles, that they are not the end and aim of society, because we know that such a theory is destructive of human dignity, because we remember that when the material factor began to hold the field in Rome, and duty to the people was reduced to giving them bread and public shows, Rome and its people were hastening to destruction, because we see to-day in France, in Spain, in every country, liberty trodden under foot, or betrayed precisely in the name of commercial interests and that servile doctrine which parts material well-being from principles ...

We do not forget the services rendered to the cause of progress by the political school of the Rights of Man, nor the importance of the economic teachings, which towards the end of the eighteenth century assailed the absurd and immoral restrictive system under which governments committed the industrial development of the nation to customs officers, as they committed its moral development to censors and constabulary 1 In an age when the rights of individuals were systematically violated, these teachings were indispensable, and without them we should not now be where we are But to-day we have passed beyond them, we cannot stand still within their limits without denving the new tendencies which aim at reconstruction. The peoples hailed the destructive work of the past century because they hoped that a new organisation would take the place of the old one, but since then they have been disillusioned again and again, and now they will not stir unless rekindled by a new organic programme The individual is sacred his interests, his rights, are inviolable. But to make them the only foundation of the political structure, and tell each individual to win his future with his own unaided strength, is to surrender society and progress to the accidents of chance and the vicissitudes of a never-ending struggle, to neglect the great fact of man's nature, his social instinct, to plant egotism in the soul, and, in the long run, impose the dominion of the strong over the weak, of those who have over those who have not - The many abortive attempts of the last forty not— The many aportive attempts of the last forty years prove this.

When, therefore, we preach almost exclusively those principles which seem to us to derive from the actual condition of human knowledge, we purpose following the way which leads to the material as well as the moral future of the nations. When we insist on the need of raising on hose principles a structure of behef, in the place of dead or dying creeds, we shall be responding to a prayer of the peoples, often ill-expressed, more often ill-understood, but which has been revealed in many forms most dissociated and dissimilar, and is the historical secret of the nineteenth century. And when we say, "Rise to the sphere of principles, guide the peoples, now wandering in darkness, to the law of Progress, to Humanity, to God, awake again the moral sense, the sentiment of Duty in men whom others would fain convert into calculating machines, show a great purpose to the young, so easily assailed to-day by discouragement and doubt, give to men by enthusiasm, and religion, and love, a new moral existence, since the old one of privilege and inequality is dust and ashes."when we say this, we are convinced that every other method of treating public questions is an illusion, or a lie, that political forms considered in isolation and by themselves are, as the ancients said of law, spiders' webs that imprison little insects, but which are torn through by big ones, that the spirit alone gives importance to forms, that institutions are a dead letter. meffectual and impotent, whenever the breath of popular progress, and brotherhood, and association does not inspire them, that all written declarations are futile where men have surrendered themselves to individualism, and organised themselves on a basis of inequality, and therefore naturally tend to elude such declarations. and rather seek in them a weapon of defence against others, convinced that no other method can profit the cause of Humanity, the great interests of the People. and Labour, and Nationality, and moral growth—the only things which ment our sacrifices and our labours

Instil into a People's soul, or into its teachers and writers, one single principle, and it will be worth more to that People and Country than a whole system of interests and rights addressed to each individual, or a war to the death against the acts of a corrupt government

If by dint of example you can root in a nation's heart the principle which the French Revolution proclaimed but never carried out, that the State owes every member the means of existence or the chance to work for st. and add a fair definition of existence, you have prepared the tnumph of right over privilege, the end of the monopoly of one class over another, and the end of pauperism1, for which at present there are only palliatives, Christian charity, or cold and brutal maxims like those of the English school of political economists When you have raised men's minds to believe in the other principle that society is an association of labours, and can, thanks to that belief, deduce both in theory and practice all its consequences, you will have no more Castes, no more aristocracies, or civil wars. or crises You will have a People -

And when the gospel of the brotherhood of all the men of a nation has made the soul a sanctuary of virtue and love, when the great conception of Nationality is no more dwarfed to mean proportions. when it seeks as a basis for its rights something more than mere material interest, interest that always has its wals, when the mother repeats its pure and holy loctrine to the child at her knee, at those hours of norn and even when woman, angel-grown, teaches ier offspring heavenly truths as axioms and principles mmutable-then only will you have a nation such as ou can never have from sophists who would found godless Nationality For Nationality is belief in a common origin and end, and if set up to-day by one nterest it can be overthrown to-morrow by another nterest more daring and more powerful And so it must ever be Principles, which some vould relegate among abstractions, by their nature ie so near material interests, and what is called the conomic factor, that they involve its practical triumph is an inevitable consequence. The sphere of principles ncludes and embraces them all But all material progress is the infallible result of all moral progress We cease to waste our strength in a petty war, nor try o defeat interests in detail and without guarantee of permanent success, we strive instead to reach the common source and plant ourselves in the key of the position The effects of our evertions may appear more slowly, but they are more certain, and alone are durable The work of faith, the moral work, advances insensibly, like the movement of the hand on the clock, but it alone is called to mark the solemn hours of the nations.

A newspaper is not a work of legislation it operates indirectly only A newspaper does not clothe the naked poor, or give bread to the starving it preaches and insists that this should be done. Now, how shall we work on the reader's mind? How convince him, not only of the existence of the decease but of the need of a remedy? How communicate to him the spirit of activity, the power of self-sacrifice, which are necessary to overcome obstacles? A newspaper, generally speaking, is written for the well-to-do classes, and these classes, comfortable in their prosperity, have never experienced privation or suffering, they see at times the misery of the poor, but easily accustom themselves to consider it as a sad social necessity, and leave to future generations the care of finding a remedy Sweet are indifference and oblivion to the man who sits in the sanctuary of his family, surrounded by smiling faces, while the wintry blast blows without, and the snowflakes, swift and fine, beat against the panes of a double window. Do you hope to drag these favourites of the world from their apathy, by the simple expression of the economic situation and what should be its substitute in a well-organised society? Do you hope to shake them from their selfish repose, merely by cold analysis of what happens in a sphere to which they never penetrate? They will approve perhaps in theory your utilitarian doctrines, but do not ask them to promote them Why should they? You speak in the name of interests Is not the first of all interests enjoyment? And they do enjoy

There is a great gulf between approving a thing and sacrificing yourself for it, a gulf which you with your methods cannot cross And yet this is just the

The crusade is being organised. The monarchy arrays itself for battle. It has returned to the dictatorial habits of Louis XIV. and is preparing coups d'état with the arms of the sixteenth century

In the midst of the great popular excitement of 1830 the monarchy was distraught for a moment, and thought its doom had come. In truth we, and we alone, saved it from its doom. We lost a marvellous opportunity We fougot that the morrow of victory is much more perilous than its eve Intoxicated with triumph and pride, we pitched our tents when we ought to have hastened on, and like thoughtless children, we betook ourselves to play with the arms of those we had vanguished Diplomacy lay well-nigh crushed under the popular barricades, and vet we welcomed it as a friend into our ranks, we made its arts ours, and, raining notes and protocols, learned to ape our discomfitted masters Like the condottien of old, we sent back free and armed the prisoners of battle. The monarchy was stretched low and at our mercy, and we. like medieval knights, we republicans, drew back two paces as though to give it an opportunity to remount. Coldly calculating, it took advantage of our chivalrous ardour to begin its work again, a work undertaken with a constancy and unity of conception that should make us blush at our discords and slackness

While we were numbering our dead, they began silently to increase their ranks. While we were disputing among ourselves whether to march in the name of

'or or of '92, of Robespierre or of Babœuf, they were marching on, slowly, silently, caressing some, threatening others, working their way underground when they thought themselves not powerful enough to venture into the light of day, avoiding obstacles they could not overcome. Instead of snatching from the grave a shred or so of the banner of the past, they clothed the whole past with a semblance of life, and re-decked it with the colours of the future Anger, ambition, lealousy, everything vielded to the one end of gaining Power In the North the form was given up to preserve the substance, and the habits of despotism were renounced that the monarchy of the usurper might fraternise with the monarchy of divine right. In the South they knelt in the mire, and suffered the insults of diplomacy, to obtain from it peace and help To-day the alliance is concluded, the equilibrium re-established between the old and the new powers, and both alike weigh upon us. The enemies of progress touch the apogee of power Corruption has conquered souls that fear could not reach, gold has finished the work of the prisons Consciences have been bought and sold, genius prostituted, anarchy sown among thinkers, crosses and pensions showered upon some. proscriptions and terrors upon others, the bourgeoisie has been seduced by trickery, suspicion sown broadcast. espionage raised to a system The monarchy in the pride of its strength has cast the cloak aside, and to day imprously denies God, Progress, the People, Humanity With the constable on one side and the executioner on the other, it wipes out our right to free movement and to the future, it destroys our memories and hopes, buts brute force in the place of ideas, bids us to our knees as it bade our fathers when they were serfs, when thought was banned, intellect and conscience dumb, and silence the law for all And we what shall we do? Shall we give way to despair? Shall we renounce for a time our battle-cry, frank, loyal, strenuous as our soul? Repeat the fifteen years' comedy? Show that we are tamed?

Deceive the monarchy which we could, and would not, vanquish? Copy its methods, its habits, its tactics? Lead it smilingly by tortuous ways, to the precipice's edge, then suddenly unmask ourselves, stab it in the back, and hurl it down the abyss?

Men who adopt and counsel such as the only policy left to us, who preach patience as the sole remedy for our ills, or who admit the necessity of the struggle but leave the powers that be to begin it, such men do not, I believe, understand the present state of affairs. They change a call to create into a call to oppose They falsely the stamp of the age, they betray unconsciously the cause they seek to further, they forget that the task assigned to the nineteenth century is one whose very essence it is to create, mutate, make new, one which only free spontaneous action and a free and daring conscience can complete.

It is not enough to drag a monarchy to the abyss:

It is not enough to drag a monarchy to the abyss. If it is not enough to fill up that abyss, fill it is for ever, and on it raise a listing editice. Monarchies can be un-made and re-made in a day. The mighty hand of Napoleon overturned half a score, but monarchy still lives, and greeted his grave with a smile of thumph in 1830, a throne of eight centuries vanished under three blows struck by the people, and yet we to-day are proscribed by a monarchy which has risen from its ruins Let us never forget this

What was called the fifteen years' comedy was played in France wondrous well. The skilful and flawless pesuitry of the actors might merit the envy of crowned heads. What were the consequences?

The fiften years' comety killed the monarchy of the elder branch of the Bourbons, but it killed at the same time the finals, austere, revolutionary energy which had placed France at the head of the nations of Europe While it doomed the powers that be to sleepless dread, it doomed the advanced party in France to a long rôle of dishonesty For, through it hypocray wormed itself into the souls of men, calculation took the place of enthussam, the brain superreded the heart, and theories of passwer resistance

succeeded to the genius that ever presses forward to things new The masculine, vigorous national thought languished under a multitude of petty, bastard incomplete concerts, and apostasy entered the sphere of political life That disloyal, treacherous war of subterfuges spread over French civilisation a stratum of corruption whose results last to this day such war would be fatal indeed. Here is matter for reflection When the times are ripe for breaking from the present and advancing towards the future, all hesitation is fatal it unnerves and dissolves Rapid movement is the secret of all great victories. When the consequences of a principle are exhausted, and the edifice which has sheltered us for centuries threatens to fall, we should shake the dust from our feet and hasten elsewhere Life is outside. Within, there is but the cold. benumbing air of the tomb, scepticism wandering among the runs, egotism following in its track; then, isolation and death

And to-day the times are ripe The consequences of the principle of individualism which dominated the past are exhausted. The monarchy has reached its second restoration and finds no more creative virtue in itself, its life is but a wretched plagrarism. Show me, if you can, a single important act, a single sign of European life, that does not proceed from the social principle, which does not depend upon the people, the king of the future The old world can only resist; its remaining strength is but the strength of passive resistance. The aristocracies of to-day are but corpses, now and again galvanised into motion Monarchy is the reflection, the shadow of a life that has passed away Since 1814 the future calls to us For twenty-two years the people, eager for a step forward, strain their ears for that cry And would you travel once more over the old ground. fall back, begin again a task that is done, copy the past, and, because the monarchy is in its dotage, return to infancy?

What do you hope for when you beg inspiration in the enemy's camp, and follow in its footsteps? Whither will you fare along the tortuous road of revolutionary diplomacy over which you would drag the younger generation? Beware! the roads of mere opposition such as yours lead only to monarchy There exists generally an essential relation between the means and the end. and constitutional tactics can only result in constitutional The fifteen years' opposition gave buth to 1830 Every analogous opposition will (unforeseen circum stances apart) give birth to similar results. In 1820 the people confined within the Charter the limits of the attack, because it had used itself to confine in the same bounds the limits of the defence. It will be ever the same. If, in the old revolution, the French people angrily answered the challenge of the allied monarchies of Europe by beheading a king and raising the republican banner, that challenge, we must never forget, was unprovoked and a war to the death Of the members of the royal family, some were in arms against France on the frontier, others were persistent conspirators against her in Paris Without these causes the revolution would never have reached so easily that state of things The impulse given by the demands of the States-General would not have passed beyond the movement of 'or But monarchical Europe to-day wages no open war of arms against the revolutions of a people thirty millions strong she offers them a traitor's hand, and the kiss of Judas She does not challenge them to battle she tries to dishonour them Then she creates a solitude about them, surrounds them like scorpions with a circle of fire, and in that circle they consume their own strength, and since the life of revolutions consists in growth, they nerish

But suppose it happen otherwise, suppose the people, outstripping the first impulse, wipe out a principle instead of simply modifying il., suppose they change a monarchical revolution into a republican one, and attain the purpose you have at heart. You will then have gained the form, not the habits, customs, ideas, behefs, of a republic. The people which moves not from faith, but by simple reaction against the abuses of monarchy, will preserve the antecedents, the traditions, the education of the monarchy you will have the form of a republic, but the substance of a monarchy Questions of political organisation will overlay the true, the supreme question, which is a moral and a socal one Criticism will not regenerate the peoples. Criticism is powerful to dissolve, not to create Criticism is incapable of passing beyond the theory of the individual, and the triumph of individualism can only engender a revolution for protestantism and liberty Far otherwise is the republic. The republic, as I at least understand it, means association, of which liberty is only an element, a necessary antecedent. It means association, a new philosophy of life, a divine Ideal that shall move the world, the only means of regeneration vouchsafed to the human race Opposition is an instrument of mere criticism It kills, it does not give life And when it declares a principle to be dead, it takes its seat upon the dead body and stirs no further Only a new Ideal can thrust the corpse aside, and move forward in search of a new life For this reason the revolution of '89, a revolution essentially protestant in its character, ended by enthroning criticism, by affirming the brotherhood of individuals, by organising liberty And by reason of this the revolution of 1830-a revolution purely of opposition -proved itself from the first incapable of translating into action that social conception of which it had distant glimpses Opposition can only demonstrate the barrenness, the decadence, the exhaustion of a principle Beyond, for it, there is the void, whereon men build not A republic is not planted upon a demonstration ad absurdum Direct proof is indispensable Authoritative Truth alone can give us salvation.

Two things are essential to future progress the manifestation of a principle, and its incarnation in deeds. Apostles of a faith which aims at construction, we cannot advance save with banners unfurled, confronting the hostile faith in deadly battle. Wait, they say But for what? For opportunities? But what are opportunities save a special arrangement of the circumstances whose office it is to give birth to deeds? And whence can opportunities arise except from our own efforts? Do you want war? Whom will the combatants be drawn from? From those who are marching in full accord. peoples who have even now renewed a covenant of brotherhood, who have one end in view, one enemy, one fear? Will it be against peoples prostrate in the mire? War will never arise in Europe except by insurrection. Do you want coups d'état? Only a strenuous, obstinate struggle can make them mevitable But how maintain the struggle? By conspiracy? The preachers of patience object, even as they object to insurrection By the printing press? The governments kill it you have everywhere laws which fetter it, censors who yex the writer, judges who condemn thought and shut it within prison walls Can you surmount these obstacles?

In France, perhaps But take the case of a country absolutely without a Press, without a Parliament or a Council where politics may be discussed, without literary journals, without a national theatre, without popular education, without foreign books that country to suffer, suffer terribly, the upper and middle classes as well as the mass of its people, from poverty, from domestic and foreign oppression, from constant violation of the national principle, and the absence of all intellectual and industrial development What is that country to do? Whence can arise that slow and gradual progress which you admire?

And yet that country does exist Its name is Italy, Poland, and for some time, Germany It embraces nearly two-thirds of Europe.

Look at Italy !

In her there is neither progress, nor any chance of progress, save by revolution. Tyranny has raised an impenetrable wall along her frontier. A triple army of spies, of customs officers, and of constabulary! holds nightly and daily rigil to prevent the circulation of thought Mutual instruction is prescribed. The universities are closed or enslaved. The penalty of death hangs not only over those who print clandestinely, but over those who possess or read the forbidden book

The introduction of independent foreign newspapers is forbidden. Intelligence perishes in infancy for lack of nourishment. Young men sell their faith for selfindulgence, or waste their strength in fits of barren cynicism They oscillate between Don Juan and Timon And privileged souls, souls afire for Right, who for an instant caught glimpses of the Future. when environment weighs heavy upon them, let their light go out, and perish, without an object, without a mission, like flowers unwatered or the Peri shorn of her wings Who, I ask again, shall give progress to this people? Who shall give it to Poland, who lies in equal case? Who shall give it to Germany, whose lot will soon be the same, when, in obedience to your counsels, her patriots have stayed the struggle which peoples indeed the prisons, but awakens, little by little. the masses? How may we introduce into those countries the undefined but sacred thought invoked by all, if we are influenced by personal calculations, and draw back in face of the danger, if we dare not with arms in our hands, like the smugglers of the Pyrenees, defend the contraband of the intellect?

Insurection I see for those peoples no other possible counse murrection as soon as circumstances to a superior of the state of the stat darkness condemned to silence by a double tyranny. while others more privileged can walk illumined by the sun, and discern clearly the end of the common labour -for enslaved races who for long centuries have sought in vain the mission assigned to them by God-for Poland, for Hungary, for Italy, for Spain, a country of great destinies, to-day wasting its strength between two systems, each one the translation of a false principlefor Germany also, poor, sacred Germany, who awoke us all with Luther's manly voice, for whom to-day we can only show a sympathy so lukewarm as to show like indifference We speak for all, because all are indispensable elements of the European commonweal that is to be-because above and beyond the special mission which each of us is called to fulfil on earth. there is a common mission which embraces all Humanity -because we fail to see that men have as yet duly realised how essential it is that the republican Party should be morally united by the apostolic power of the written word, and that it is the written word which determines the choice of the system round which all the forces of the progressive press of Europe must rally We have men to-day, republican writers of merit, who maintain that there is no light to guide the people to a better land except it come from the hands of those who hold watch and guard to keep them in the slough in which they he-others who are content to implore, almost as an alms, some fraction of liberty for the people-others who desire that European association should ripen under the sun of constitutional monarchy, who reject as dangerous any attempt at regeneration by means of a great religious principle, who protest against every bold movement of the people as inopportune and meffectual, against every really creative belief displayed by the defenders of the people And I protest against the false theory, which confounds the material expression of progress with progress itself, and redoubles, as it were. the burdens of the peoples, by condemning them to an initiation by degrees, parallel to the stages of suffering they have passed through.

No those peoples will sink to the depths of hell in their fall, but if they rise, they will attain to heaven

Nations are initiated into the worship of liberty by the sufferings of servitude. They have endured beyond words, when they rise, they will grow, beyond all imagination, to a giant's stature. Their grief was blessed. Every tear taught them a truth. Every year of matrytdom prepared them for an absolute redemption. They have drained the cup to the dregs. Nothing is left to them but to dash it to pieces.

What, then, is to be done?

(1) Preach ! fight ! act ! The republican Party must change neither attitude nor language Every modification introduced, for dubious tactical reasons, into its conditions of life. would bring it from its high estate to a mere political party Now, the republican Party is not a political party it is an essentially religious party. It has its faith, its doctrine, its martyrs from Spartacus onwards. and it must have doctrine inviolable, authority infallible the martyr's spirit and call to self-sacrifice Forgetfulness of this duty, imitation of the monarchy or aristocracy, the substitution of negations for positive beliefs, have often wrecked it. The Idea, the religious thought, of which it is, even unconsciously, a manifestation on earth, has raised it to giant stature when all men said that it had gone for ever We must not forget that political parties fall and die religious parties never die, except when the victory is won, when their vital principle has attained its full development, and become identified with the progress of civilisation and of morals Then, but not till then, in the heart of the people, or in the brain of some individual, powerful by virtue of genius and love. God plants a new thought, vaster and more fruitful than that which is passing away, the centre of faith advances a step, and only those who gather around it constitute the party of the future

The republican Party need not fear for the final issue of its mission, or be discouraged for temporary defeats that do not affect the main body, and only concentrate around it the combatants who, in the heat of battle, have strayed too far away, or fear because at every turn men try to set up might for night, matter for spirit. The danger is elsewhere

Having regard to the essence of things, and without reference to the passing hour or the men of our day, the position of the republican Party is, by reason of the recent persecutions, better than before The law of oth of September.1 which was to prove fatal to us, has given representative monarchy its death-blow. It has settled the eternal question between the citizen monarchy and the dynastic opposition. It has discredited systems which professed to reconcile the sovereignty of the people and the irresponsibility of its deputies, continued progress and the immobility of an hereditary power. It has demonstrated the impotence of the doctringire and destroyed political eclecticism The period of transition, which unnerved the combatants by deceptive hopes and foolish terrors, is at an end Slaves or victors "To be or not to be " the question is now clearly stated in these terms we must choose between debasing our nature and intelligence and become renegades to every sacred idea, every powerful conception, or rising in open war and appealing from the justice of kings to the justice of peoples, to the sudement of God The truce is broken for ever People and monarchy are to-day enemies. enemies confessed and beyond recall On one side monarchy, its centuries of life in the past, its traditional authority, its sicarii, its tax-gatherers, its constabulary? on the other, the people, its centuries in the future, its instinct of new things, its immortal youth, its countless hosts. The jousts are cleared for the two combatants. The battle may begin at any moment

"You are deceived, they tell us "The peoples lack faith The masses lie torpid. So used are they to wear chains that they have lost the habit of motion. You have to do with helots, not with men. How will you drag them to battle, and keep them in the field? Many a time have we called them to arms, we have raised the cry of 'people, liberty, vengeance!' and they lifted for a moment their drowsy heads, and then fell back into their old torpor They saw the funcial procession of our martyrs pass by, knew not that their rights, their life, their salvation, were being buried with them follow riches, and fear condemns them to stand still Enthusiasm is spent and cannot easily be rekindled Vet, without the masses you are powerless to act. you can face martyrdom, not gain the victory if you think that one day a generation of avengers will spring from your blood, but do not involve in your fate those who lack alike your strength and hope Martyrdom cannot be made the baptism of a whole Party It is useless to waste in abortive attempts forces which one day may be effectively employed. Do not delude vourselves about the times Be resigned and

The problem is a serious one, It involves the future of the Farty.

The peoples lack faith But what effects should we argue from this fact, and what are its causes? Shall we affirm a false identity between faith and power? shall we say that where faith is wanting the power to achieve does not east, that to-day the people are impotent from the very nature of things, that they have not suffered enough, that the times are not ripe, that the atonment—if indeed the peoples have aught to atone—is yet unaccomplished?

To accept such opinions would be to accept a system of historical fatalism which the intelligence of the age of historical fatalism which the intelligence of the age accepted We should make cowardly obeisance to a fact, without any effort to explain it, and deny the innate potentialities of humanity. The existence of a fact does not prove its necessity it can only govern the actions of those who press maternalism to its extremes and renounce the study of causes to the passive under their influence. Will you deny to a man power to walk because he stands motionless before you? The actual condition of things is no measure of the forces which are latent in the peoples Are the peoples essentially weak, or do they simply lack faith, that faith which reveals itself in deeds and sets forces in motion? These are the true terms of the problem. Yes, the peoples lack faith, not the individual faith. which makes martyrs, but the common, social faith, which gains victories, the faith which awakens the multitudes, that faith in their destiny, in their mission, in the mission of the Age, which illumines and rouses, prays and fights, which fearlessly advances along the paths of God and Humanity, bearing in its right hand the people's sword, in its heart the people's religion, in its soul the people's future But this faith which was preached by Lamennais. the high priest of the age, and which should be translated by others in the terms of their own national life, will it come to us from our sense of strength or from our conscience? Is it an instinct of our real impotence that has banished it from our lives, or is it opinions falsely conceived, and prejudices that we can fight? Would not one act of strenuous will suffice to restore the balance between oppressor and oppressed? And if this be so, are we working to evoke it? Are our tendencies, our manifestations of the thought we would promote, sufficient to achieve our purpose? Are we impelled by fate to lead the movement, or are the masses who follow us responsible for the present sleep of death?

Consider Italy Mafortune, suffering, protests, in-dividual sacrifice, have reached ther extreme limit in that land. The cup is full. Oppression, like the air, is all-pervading rebellon also. Three separate States, twenty cities, two millions of men revolt in a week, I over-throw their governments and declare themselves emanipated, and not a single protest was made, not a single drop of blood was shed. Insurrections follow in quick succession. Is force wanting to those twenty-five millions? Italy in revolution has strength enough to fight three Austrias. Do they lack the inspiration of traditions, the relieving of memories, a stored neat? Naw, the people still bow before the holy relics of a greatness that was once Do they lack a mission? Nav. Italy alone among the nations has twice given the gospel of Unity to Europe Is courage wanting? Ask of the days of 1746, of 1799, of the memories of the Grande Armée, of the martyrs, thrice holy, who for fourteen years have died for an idea, silent and inglorious

Consider Switzerland Can any one deny true valour, the deep sense of independence, of those sons of the Alps? Five centuries of struggle, of intrigues, of civil and religious strife, have failed to soil their flag of 1308 with foreign oppression. And yet Switzerland-that Switzerland who defeated Austria in twenty battles, whose war-cry would suffice to raise Germany and Italy in insurrection, and who knows well how kings would pause ere they embarked on a European war that the peoples clamoured for, because they know that its last battle would be the Waterloo of Monarchy-vet Switzerland today, as the months come round, accepts dishonour and bows her head before each petty dispatch of an Austrian agent

Remember 1813 and the German youth who deserted the lecture-rooms of the Universities to hasten to the battles of Independence, remember the thrill of excitement at the cry of Nationality, Liberty, a common Fatherland, which ran through Germany from one end to the other, and then tell me if the Deputies, Electors, public writers, and all the men of position who were content to lose themselves in the maze of constitutional opposition, if all these had rallied around the banner of Hambach,1 whether that would not have sufficed to rouse the whole people

Remember Grochow, Waver, Ostrolenska,2 and then tell me to what straits Russia would have been driven, if Poland had wasted no precious time, begging help of the

The Constitutions of a fig. 2 th Hambach—a greet topolar demonstration in fewor of Constitutional Reforms had sear the pid cash of that name. It was an exho of the French Revolution of July 1879, and was attended by thousands of people from all parts of South-western Germany "Battles during the Polish Insurrection of 1831. See Fyffe's History of Studens Europe, Vol II c v diplomacy who had stabbed her for a hundred years, if her atmes had at once shifted the active revolutionary movement to its natural centre beyond the Boug, if some great conception of a people's freedom had called to insurrection the maces, whose true heart Bogdan Chmelincki revealed in 1648, if, while enthusiasm was dictator, and terror paralysed the enemy, while the masses of Lithuana, of Galieno, of Ucernia, were quivering with hopes of liberty, the insurrection had flown from the Belvedere to Lithuania

I state with profound conviction, that there probably does not exist a single people in Europe which is not able by faith, by self-sacrifice, and by the logic of revolution to break its chains in the face of monarchical Europe conspiring to work its doom—not a people that is not able through the holy creed of the Future and of Love, through the mighty watchward inscribed on its banner of insurrection, to start a crusade in Europe—no, not a people which has not had its chance since 18 to

But in Italy, in Germany, in Poland, in Switzerland, in France, everywhere, men, unfortunately influential, have perverted the organal character of the revolutionambitious and covetous men have seen in the uprising of a people only a chance to slake their own thirst of pelf or power-weak men who trembled at the difficulties of the undertaking, have, at the very onset, sacrificed the logical development of insurrection to their own fears. Everywhere false and deadly doctrines have turned revolutions from their goal The theory of class rule has supplanted the people's theory of the emancipation of all by efforts of all The national idea has been weakened or destroyed by the idea of foreign assistance Nowhere did the promoters and directors of the insurrection cast into the scale of their country's destiny the sum-total of the forces that a strenuous and inspired will would have brought into play nowhere have consciousness of a high mission, faith in its fulfilment, and a knowledge of the age and its dominant idea, guided the men who assumed the control of events, and made themselves responsible to humanity for their success.

156 Faith and the Future

They had before them a task for giants, and they grovelled on their bellies They saw darkly the secret of the generations, they heard the cry of tribes of men eager to shake off the dust of their sepulchres, and, youthful or regenerate, confront a new life It was their task to publish, without fear, on the housetops the gospel of the People and the Nations, and instead, they stammered halting words of royal concessions, of a charter, of compacts between right and might, justice and injustice They tried, like old men whose natural force is spent, to prolong an artificial existence, and sought in the policy of the old régime the secret of its imperfect and fleeting life They mingled life and death, liberty and servitude, privilege and equality, past and future We were bound -though even on their dead bodies-to raise the flag of revolt so high that all nations might read on it a promise of victory And they dragged it through the mire of royalty, overlaid it with protocols and nailed its motionless folds, like the sign of a bawdy house, on the doors of all the Foreign Legations they believed in the promises of every minister, in the hopes held out by every Ambassador, in everything, except in the people and its omnipotence We saw revolutionaly leaders immersed in the study of the treaties of 1815, seeking therein, forsooth, the charter of Polish or Italian liberty; others more guilty, denied Humanity, and made selfishness their God, when they wrote on their banner a principle of non-intervention worthy of the Middle Ages, others, more guilty still, denied their brothers and their Fatherland, broke up national unity at the moment that they should have introduced its triumph, they uttered the impious words, "Men of Bologna, the cause of the Modenese is not our cause," even while the foreigner was advancing to their gates They all forgot-in their zeal to give, as they said, a legal character to revolution-that every insurrection acquires legality from its aim, legitimacy from victory, means of defence from offence, pledges of success from expansion they forgot that the charter of each nation's liberty is a clause in the Charter of Humanity, that they alone deserve to conquer who are prepared to conquer or to die for all

And then-seeing the men who started the revolutions pale in front of their undertaking, retreat when action became imperative, or take a devious and timid path, without a goal, without a programme, without hope except in foreign help, the people also were afraid and paused, or rather perceived that the hour had not yet come, and stopped short With revolutions before them betrayed in their inception, the masses abstained, nascent enthusiasm was stiffed, faith disappeared

Faith disappeared, but what have we done, what are we doing, to raise it up again? Oh shame and woe to us! Since that holy light of the nations vanished, we have been wandering in the darkness, without a bond, without a purpose, without unity of direction or have folded our arms upon our breasts like men without hope Some few lifted a long cry of anguish, renounced all earthly progress, to croon a chant of resignation, a death-bed prayer, or they made themselves rebels against hope, 2 and with a bitter smile proclaimed the advent of the powers of darkness they accepted scepticism, cynicism, faithlessness, as inevitable, irrevocable facts of human nature, and the echo of their blasphemies translated itself in degraded natures into corruption, and in untainted natures into the suicide of despair 3 Our literature of to-day oscillates between these extremes. Others, suddenly remembering the light which illumined their infancy, dragged themselves back to the sanctuary whence it issued, and laboured to rekindle it, 4 or were absorbed in contemplation of self, and began to live in the ero. and there forgetting or denying the world of phenomena, never advanced beyond the study of the individual,

^{&#}x27; ε ε — The German Romancists, and partly, Manzoni and Foscolo * ε ε — Byron * See Foscolo's Jacopo Ortie, a favourite book of Mazzini'a. * ε ε — Chateaubriand, Manzoni, and, in his early days, Victor Hugo

And this is our philosophy Others, finally, born for battle, spurred by a passion of self-sacrifice, which, under wise guidance, would have worked miracles, dominated by sublime but imperfect and ill-defined instincts, snatched a banner from their athers' tombs, and rished forward; but in the first few steps they parted Each of them tore a shred from the flag and vaunted it as the flag of all the host. This is the history of our political life

In Mary We derive the season of the reader for our insistence on these complaints. They are our defined Carthago Mine is not the work of a writer it is the stern and fearless mission of an apostle. This mission permits of no diplomacy. I am investigating the causes of a delay which seems to me to have its source outside the hostile forces. I seek a way of stating the problem in such terms as may permit us quickly to win back the power of making a new departure. Therefore I must be slient or speak the whole truth.

Now, it seems to me that the delay has two chief causes, both due to the Party wandering from its goal, both tending to substitute the worship of the past for the worship of the future

The first of these causes has led us to mistake for a programme what was nothing more than a concluding none than a concluding chapter, a powerful summary, a formula which gave expression to the work of a whole age and its conquests. It has made us confound two distinct philosophies of life and two distinct ges, and reduce a mission of left and two distinct ages, and reduce a mission of its actual to the contract proportions of a work of development and deduction from old premisses. It has caused us to abundon the principle for its symbol, New Ideal, that fleet cross that it is transmitted by the hand of God from one people to another, to degrade and smother the national spirit of the peoples, which is their life, their mission and the strength even for its achievement, the part assigned to them by God in the common task, in the development of thought one and manifold, which is the soul of our life on earth. (a) The second cause has led us to confound the principle with one of its manifestations, the external element of every social organisation with one of its successive developments, and to consider a mission as completed which was only expanding and, in consequence, changing its character Because of that error we broke up the unity of the conception precisely when it required a wider development, we travested the function of the eighteenth century, we made a negation the starting-point of the mineteenth, and abandoned religious thought when it was more than ever increasing to review and to extend it transformed, and to gather together in one great social conception all the truths that to-day he unrelated and awart.

The eighteenth century, which is too generally regarded as a century of scenticism and negations, devoted entirely to a task of criticism, had its faith, its mission, and practical schemes to fulfil it. It was a titanic, boundless faith in human liberty and power Its mission was to tabulate-if the expression be permissible-the assets of the first Epoch of the European world to entomise and reduce to a concrete formula that which eighteen centuries of Christianity had examined, developed, made a fact to constitute the individual as he was called to be. free, active, sacred, inviolable that was its mission And achieved it by the French Revolution, a translation into political terms of the (3) protestant revolution, a deeply religious manifestation, whatever superficial writers may think who judge the whole period by the sherrations of a few individuals, secondary actors in the drama The instrument employed to effect the revolution and to achieve its mission was Right Its power, its mandate, the legitimacy of its actions, lay in a theory of Rights its supreme formula was a Declaration of Rights What else, in fact, is man, the individual, save Right? Does he not, within the ever-advancing boundaries of progress, represent the human person and the element of individual freedom? And the aim of the eighteenth century was piecisely to complete that human evolution which was foreseen by the ancients, announced by Christianity, and attained in part by protestantism Between the century and that aim stood a multitude of obstacles, fetters of all kinds on free spontaneity, on the free devolopment of individual faculties, warnings, rules, and orders, that limited human action, the traditions of a force that was spent, aristocracies which seemed capable and strong, religious forms that forbade progress It was necessary to overthrow them all, and the century overthrew them It fought a long and terrible but victorious battle against every influence that frittered human power into disconnected fragments. that denied progress or stayed the flight of intellect. Every great revolutionary thought needs an ideal for its centre of action, its fulcrum. This ideal the century found by subjectively centring itself in the individual, and it was the eeo, the human conscience, the "I am "1 of Christ to the Powers of His day Centred in that conception, the Revolution, conscious of its own strength and sovereignty by right of conquest, disdained to prove to the world its origin, its roots in the past. First it professed its faith It cried like Fichte . "Liberty ! without Equality there is no Liberty, all men are equal " Then it proceeded to deny It denied the dead past it denied feudalism, aristocracy, monarchy It denied the (4) Catholic dogma, a dogma of absolute resignation, that poisoned the springs of liberty and planted despotism at the summit of its structure Unnumbered wrecks strewed the ground But in the midst of them, amid all those negations, a mighty Yea arose-the creature of God ready to act, radiant with power and willthe ecce homo, repeated after eighteen centuries of suffering and strife, not by the voice of the martyr, but on the altar raised by the revolution to victory Right, individual faith, rooted in the world for ever.

Is this all we seek? Should man, endowed with power to progress, idly repose like an emancinated slave content with his own solitary liberty? Does nothing remain, to fulfil his mission on the earth, but to carry the principle to its logical conclusions, to translate then into facts, and to defend the ground we have won, but advance no further?

Is the series of terms which make the great equatior closed because the human unknown quantity is known because one of the terms of progress, that which constitutes the individual, can be placed among quantite that are known and defined? Is the faculty of progress exhausted? Is no movement possible but in a circle?

Because man, consecrated by thought to the kingdom of the world, has broken through an outworn form of religion that impressned his activity and denied him independence, shall we never more possess a bond of common brotherhood, or religion, or conception of universal Providential law that all may take and believe?

No. eternal God! Thy word is not finished. Thy thought, the thought of the world, is not yet all revealed It still creates, and will continue to create, for long ages beyond all human calculation ages that have run their course have only revealed to us a few fragments Our mission is not ended We scarcely know its origin, we know nothing of its final end time and our discoveries do but extend its confines It ascends from century to century, towards destines unknown to us it seeks its own law, of which we possess but the first few lines From initiative to initiative through the series of Thy successive incarnations it purifies and extends the formula of self-sacrifice · pursues its own path learns thy ever-widening law. Forms are altered and dissolved Religions die The human spirit leaves them behind, as the wayfarer leaves the fires that warmed him in the night, and goes in search of other Suns. But Religion remains Thought is immortal, it survives all forms, and is born again from its own ashes. The idea frees itself from the shrunken symbol, escapes from the chrysalis which prisoned it, which criticism had eaten through. It shines forth pure and bright, a new star in the firmament of Humanity How many has faith yet to add that the whole way of the future may be illumined? Who can say how many stars, thoughts of the ages, have yet to rise in cloudless splendour and shine in the firmament of mind, that man may become a living epitome of the Word on the earth, and may say to himself, "I have faith in myself, my destrupt is accomplished"?

This is the Law One task succeeds to another, one ideal of life to another And for us the one that precedes us directs our task and declares its method and order It includes all the terms that the earlier systems have won, and adds the new one which becomes the end and aim of all our efforts, the unknown quantity that we have to solve Criticism, too, has its work, but finds its performance in the positive belief of the age Criticism. in fact, lives only a borrowed life, it exists only in phenomena, it draws from other sources its purpose, mission, standard A part of every age, it is the banner of none The 1 thinker who divides Epochs into organic and critical falsifies History Every Epoch is essentially synthetic and organic The progressive evolution of thought, of which our world is the visible manifestation. takes place by continual expansion. The chain cannot be broken. The diverse aims are bound together. The cradle is linked to the tomb

Thus, scarcely had the French Revolution concluded one Epoch, when the first rays of another appeared on the horizon, scarcely had the human individual, with the charter of rights in his hand, proclaimed his triumph, when human thought presented another charter, that of principles Scarcely was the unknown quantity of the so-called Middle Ages solved, and the great purpose of the (5) Clinatian system attained, when another unknown quantity asked solution of the present generation, another arm called for its efforts. One every side tens were asking. What is the end of liberty, or of equality, which in its ultimate analysis is only the liberty of all? The free man is only an active force ready to work. In what manner shall it work? Capriciously? In every direction that presents itself? That is not life, rather a simple sequence of acts, of phenomena, of symptoms of vitality, without connection or relation, or continuity its name is anarchy The liberty of one will inevitably clash with the liberty of another, we shall have continually shock and counter-shock among individuals, waste of force and useless dissipation of that productive faculty within which should be held sacred The liberty of all, without a common law to direct it, leads to a war of all, the more mexorably cruel, the more the individual combatants are equally matched. And men imagined they had found the remedy when they had disinterred from the foot of the cross of Christ-that cross which dominates a whole age in the history of the world—the phrase of brotherhood which the Man-God when dying had left to the human race: a sublime word unknown to the pagan world. through which the Christian world had, often unconsciously, fought many a holy battle from the Crusades to Lepanto They wrote it on all their banners, and with its sister watch-words, liberty and equality, it formed the programme of the future. Then they tried to restrain progress within the circle marked out by those three points. But progress burst through the ring Once again the eternal "cus bono" appeared We all in fact demand an aim, a human aim what else is existence but an end with means calculated to attain it? And brotherhood does not include a common social ideal for men on earth it does not include even its necessity it has no essential necessary relation to the development of a purpose, that shall bind together in harmony all our faculties and powers Brotherhood is certainly the base of every society, the first condition of social progress, but it is not progress itself. It makes progress possible, it supplies it with a necessary constituent, but it does not define it The principle of brotherhood is compatible with movement in a circle. And the human mind begun to understand that brotherhood—the necessary link between two principles of blorry and equality, that personnes the indendualistic philosophy—never passes beyond their limits, that it is activity can only operate between individuals, that it easily assumes the name of charry, that though it can five the starting-point whence Humanity shall reach the social Ideal, it can never be substituted for it.

The quest was pursued further We saw darkly that the end, the function of existence, must also be the final goal of that progressive development which constitutes existence itself, that hence in order to make straight and swift for this end, it was necessary to know exactly the nature of such progression and bring our actions into harmony with it To understand the Law and to regulate our work in accordance with it, is the true way to state the problem. Now the law of the individual can only be discovered in the species. The mission of the individual can only be learnt and defined from an elevation which commands the whole field Hence to know even the law of the individual it is necessary to ascend Only from a conception of Humanity can we deduce the secret, the standard, the law of life for man. Hence the necessity for the co-operation of all, for harmony in our labours, in a word, for association, in order that the work of all (6) may be accomplished, hence also the need for a thorough change in the organisation of the revolutionary Party, in theories of government, in the study of philosophy, politics, and economics, all of which have been till now inspired by the sole principle of liberty The horizon has changed The sacred word Humanity, uttered with new significance, has discovered to the eye of Genius a new world, which hitherto had been no more than a presentiment, a new Age has hegun.

Do we need a book to prove it? Do we need time for the principle to develop in order to demonstrate that such is really the present intellectual movement, that the century is labouring in search of its own philosophy of life? Have we not seen, for a period of nearly twenty years, all the schools of philosophy occupying themselves. even when they stray back to the past, in the search after a great unknown? Is not this confessed almost despite themselves by those who would gain most by diverting men from the end? We see to-day a Catholicism that attempts to reconcile Gregory VII with Luther, the papacy with the free and independent human soul. We have a retrograde and hypocritical party, that gropes dubiously among theories of government, and a stammering mystic kind of iesuitism, which sacrilegiously mutters the name of social party And daily we hear the word Humanity on the lips of materialists, I who cannot understand its worth, and who betray every moment their natural affinities to the individualism of the Empire. Whether as a heartfelt behef, or homage given perforce, the new Age has won its rights over nearly all intellects. Some of the perferved apostles of progress were not long since complaining that the hostile camp had pirated our words without even understanding their significance, it was a puerile complaint. It is just in this very accord, instinctive and unwilling as it is, that we find a notent mark of the Word of our Age. HUMANITY

Now, every Age has its own peculiar faith Every system includes the conception of an ideal and an invasion. And every mission has its own instrument, its own forces, its own lever. Any attempt to translate into facts the mission of one Age with the machinery of another, can only end in an indefinite series of abortive efforts Defeated by the utter want of proportion between the means and the end, such attempts might produce marryrs, but never lead to victory.

And this is the point we have reached All our hearts and intellects have the presentment of a great Age, and yet we would give it, for the ensign of its faith, mere criticism and the negations with which the eighteenth century was forced to surround its new conquest of liberty. We mutter by God's inspiration the sublime words, regeneration, progress, a new mission, the future,

and yet, when we try to realise the programme they contain, we obstinately use the weapons of a mission that is dead. We invoke a social world, a vast harmonious organisation of the forces which are secting confusedly in this vast workshop we call earth, and to call that new world into life, to lay the foundations of a peaceful organisation, we hark back to old habits of rebellion, that waste our strength within the circle of midstudiation. We raise the cry of "the future!" with the weeks of old systems and lost still, and the control of the foundation of the control of Fath requires a purpose that shall embrace the whole of ½7, that shall concentrate all its manifesiations and direct its diverse modes, or subordinate them to the controlling activity of a single one it requires a ferrid, unshaken belief that that purpose shall be attained, the profound conviction of a mission and the obligation to fulfil it, finally, the consciousness of a supreme power that guards the believer's progress to his goal. These are the indispensable elements and where any one is wanting, we may have a sect, a school, a political party, not a faith, nor an hourly self-sacrifice for the sake of a high religious ideal.

But we have no definite religious ideal, or deep conviction of the duty implied in a mission, or the consciousness of a supreme and protecting authority. Our apostolate to-day is an opposition of criticism. We fight by appealing to selfash interests, and our weapon is a theory of rights. We are all, sublime presentiments notwithstanding, children of rebellion. We move, like renegades, without God, without Law, without a banner which shall beckon to the future.

The old asm has disappeared the new one, which, for an instant we dimly saw, is annulled by the doctrine of rights, that alone directs our labours. For us the institution is at once end and means the session that the session from all our works. We look only at the political side of things. We talk of harmonising human faculties, and neglect the most obvious and active element of human nature. We are bold enough not so with the control of the control of

Mor do I exagente I know the exceptions and admire them But the Party, speaking generally, is such as I describe it. Its presentiments, its aspirations, belong to the new Age the characteristics of its organisation and the means it proposes to adopt, belong to the old. The Parry has long divined the mission entrusted to it, but without understanding its character or the machinery adapted to its fulfillment. Hence it is powerless to succeed, and will be, until the day come, when it shall understand that the crybin double to come, when the state of the control of the cont

What! You compian that faith is dead or dyng! you lament that souls are socned with the breath of egobism—and yet you mock at belief, and proclaim in your pages that religion no longer exists, that its day is past, and the religious future of the peoples for ever closed! You marvel that the masses advance but slowly along the path of self-sacrifice and association, and in the meantime you lay down as your principle at theory of individualism that has only a negative value, a theory that results not in association, but in loose concourses of human atoms, and which in ultimate analysis is only gootsm draped in the mantle of philosophical formulas

Your purpose should be a work of regeneration, of moral reform—for without this any political organisation barren—and you delude yourselves with expectations of success while you banish from your work the religious idea

Politics deal with men where and as they are they define their tendencies and regulate their actions in accordance with them. It is only religious thought that can transferure both can transfigure both Religious thought is the breath of life of Humanity, at once its life and soul, its spirit and its outward sign Humanity exists only in the consciousness of its own ongin, and the presentiment of its own destinies. It reveals itself only when it concentrates its forces on some point between the two. Now this is precisely the function of the religious idea. That idea establishes a belief in the common origin of all, it places before us. as an article of belief, a common future, it concentrates all the active faculties round a central point, from which they move on unceasingly in the direction of that future. it directs all the forces latent in the human soul to its attainment. It comprehends life in all its aspects, in its every manifestation, however minute, it breathes good wishes over the cradle and the tomb, supplies, in philosophic language, the higher and most general formula of a given Epoch of civilisation, the simplest and most comprehensive expression of its knowledge, the common principle which governs the whole, and controls all its successive evolutions. That idea is, for the individual, the symbol of the relation that exists between him and the Age to which he belongs, the revelation of his function, and standard of conduct . the flag that makes him able to fulfil his mission. That idea elevates and purifies the individual, dries up the springs of egotism, by changing and removing outside himself the centre of activity. It creates for man that theory of duty which is the mother of self-sacrifice, which eyer was, and eyer will be, the inspirer of great and noble things, a sublime theory, that draws man near to God. borrows from the divine nature a spark of omnipotence, crosses at one leap all obstacles, makes the martyr's scaffold a ladder to victory, and is as superior to the narrow, imperfect theory of rights as the law is superior to one of its corollaries (7.)

Right is the faith of the individual Duty is the common, collective faith. Right can only organise resistance, destroy, not found. Duty builds up and associates, it springs from a general law, whereas Right has its origin only in individual will. Hence nothing prevents attacks on rights every injured individual may rebel against them, and force alone is the supreme arbiter between the antagonists This, in fact, was the reply that societies founded upon rights often made to their enemies Now societies that make duty their basis would not be driven to use force, once admit the principle of duty, and the possibility of strife has gone. the individual is made subordinate to the common aim. and thus duty cuts at the very root of the evil for which right has only palliatives. Moreover, the doctrine of rights does not include progress as a necessary element it admits it merely as a simple fact. The exercise of rights being necessarily optional, progress is abandoned to the caprice of a liberty without rule or purpose. And Right kills self-sacrifice, and banishes martyrdom from the world In every theory of individual rights, material interests alone dominate and martyrdom becomes absurd what interests can exist beyond the tomb? But for all hat, martyrdom is often the baptism of a world, the olemn initiation of progress Every doctrine that does 10t rest on progress as an essential law of its being is nferior to the ideal and to the needs of the Age ret, the doctrine of rights even to day reigns sovereign mong us, it rules that republican party which announces tself as the advanced party in Europe and yet-for it natters little if our lips instinctively utter the words. luty, self-sacrifice, mission-the liberty of the republicans s merely a theory of resistance . their religion, if indeed hey mention it, only expresses the relation between God nd the individual the political order they invoke and onour by the name of social is only a series of prohibitions promoted into laws, which ensure to each the power of pursuing his own aim, his own interests, his own tendencies, their definition of Law does not go beyond the expression of the general will their formula of association is the Society of Rights their creed does not pass beyond the limits laid down nearly half a century ago in a Declaration of Rights, by a man who was himself the incarnation of the struggle their theories of Authority are theories of mistrust their organic problem-an old remnant of a patched-up constitutionalism-is reduced to finding a point around which individualism and association. liberty and general law, may oscillate for ever in barren antagonism their people is often a caste-the most numerous, it is true, and the most useful-in open rebellion against other castes in order to enjoy in its turn the rights that God intends for all their republic is the turbulent, intolerant democracy of Athens (8) their war-cry is a cry of vengeance their symbol, Spartacus

Now, this is the eighteenth century once more, its philosophy, its theory of mankind, its materialistic polity, its analysis, its protestant entriesm, its sovereignty of the midrividual, its rejection of an old religious formula, its mistrust of all authority, its spirit of strife and emancipation. It is the French Revolution over again, the past with some new glimpses of the future, servitude to old things surrounded by the prestige of youth

The past is fatal to us The French Revolution, I state with conviction, is crushing is It weight almost like an incubus upon our heart and impedes its action We are dazzled by the splendour of its gigants struggles, fascinated by its victorious glance, and so remain to day still prostrate before it. We expect everything, both in men and things, from its programme, we attempt to copy Robespierre and St. Just, and search in the records of the Chibs of 1792 or 1793 names for the exchoss of 1833 or 1834. Now, while we are apang our fathers we forget that our fathers aped no one, and were great because of this. Ther inspirations flowed from contemporary sources, from the needs of the masses, from the nature of their environment. And piecesely because the instrument they employed was adapted to the purpose they had in view, they worked miracles. Why do we not at as they did? Why, while studying and respecting tradition, should we not move onward? We ought to worship the greatness of our fathers, and seek in their tombs a pledge of the future, not feture is before us, and God, the father of all revelations and all ages, alone can point out the infinite way Up. then! and let us be great in our turn For this, it is necessary to understand our mission in its fulness We stand to-day between two ages, between the grave of one world and the cradle of another, between the last boundary of the individualistic philosophy and the threshold of HUMANITY With eyes fixed on the future, we must break the last links of the chain which holds us in bondage to the past, and with deliberate stages move We have freed ourselves nom the abuses of the old world we must now free ourselves from its glories. The task of the eighteenth century is accomplished. Our fathers repose tranquil and proud in their tombs sleep, like warriors after battle, wrapped in their flag Fear not that you will grieve them The red banner of the blood of Christ which Luther handed on to the Convention,1 to be planted on the slain in twenty battles of the peoples, is a trophy sacred to us all None will dare to touch it But let us advance in the name of God We will return hereafter to lay at its foot, there where our fathers lie, some of the laurels that our own hands have won To-day we have to found the polity of the nineteenth century, to climb through philosophy to fasth, to define and organise association, proclaim HUMANITY, initiate the new Age. The old Age can attain its actual fulfilment only in the baptism of the new confess it gladly. My voice is but one among many that preach nearly the same ideas, and proclaim associa tion as the fundamental principle that must henceforth direct our political work Many powerful intellects have condemned the cold doctrine of rights wherever they have found it alone and disconnected, condemned it as the last formula of individualism, to-day degenerating into sheer materialism many schools, some extinct some still active, invoke duty as an anchor of salvation for a society tormented by fruitless desires Why, then do I insist on protesting against their want of fore sight? What does it matter if the end preached be the centre of a new programme, or only the development of the old, if men whose cry, like ours, is forward / persis in confounding association with fraternity, or HUMANITY -the compendium of all human faculties organised to one end-with more liberty and equality for all? Why proclam a new Age, and so involve ourselves in all the difficulties of a fresh task?

These things are perhaps not new I know this and

Is, then, our contest one of names alone?

It is important to proclaim a new Age to affirm that all we preach to day on earth is verily a new programme, and, for this reason, that it is bound to be henceforth universally recognised.

We desire not only to Minik, but to at We desire not only the freeing of one people, and of others through it, but the freeing of all the peoples through then own efforts. Now, conscience alone frees the peoples They will act only when they recognise a new ideal whose attainment demands the exertions of all, the equality of all, and a new departure. Without such recognition, there is no hope of faith, of self-sacrifice, the state of the self-sacrifice, the self-sacrifice of the s

And then we shall have silence, maction, suspended life This is the spectacle that, while I write, the whole of Europe presents

The ideal of a new Age, which includes a new end to be attained, gives the initiative to the future, and kindles the universal conscience into life it we learn to start afresh and not to copy, we work out our own mission, not execute another's, we put Europe in the stead of France We furnish a potent element to feed revolutionary activity By proclaiming a new Age we proclaim the existence of a new philosophy of life, a general conception destined to embrace all the terms of earlier philosophies with vet one more, and, working from that new term, we co-ordinate all the historical series, all the facts that are grouped around it, all the manifestations of life, all the aspects of the human problem, all the branches of human knowledge We give a second, a new impulse to the labour of the intellect We proclaim the need of a new encyclopedia, which shall summarise all the progress we have made, and in itself be one step forward more We place outside controversy all the aims which formed the purpose of past revolutions, the liberty, the equality, the fraternity of men and of peoples, we put them in the list of undisputed truths We part for ever from the exclusively individualist Age. and with greater reason, from that individualism which is the materialism of that age. We block the roads to the past.

And finally, by that affirmation we reject every imperfect and issueless phiase that states a problem without attempting to solve it. We part from every school that titres to reconcile life and death, and to reform the world by an extinct philosophy. We build God Himself surety for the sacred doctime of the people, and its sovereignty We place, in the very stamp of the age, a new title to universal suffrage. We ruse politics to a philosophical conception. We establish an apostolate of Humanity, by vindicating that common right of nations which should be the symbol for our rede. We consecrate those spontaneous, sudden, collective movements of the peoples, whose work it is to proclaim the new Ideal of hie, and translate it into action. We lay the cornersone of a flummatinaria Faith, to which the republican Party must rise, if it still wish to conquer. Therefore it is that every Age has its baptism of faith, our still lacks it, and we can, if nothing more, prepare the way, and make ourselves its heralds.

Ours is therefore no idle contest of words. The triumph or the failure of the cause we uphold depends upon the road which the Party takes

We fell as a political party we must rise again as a religious party

The religious element is universal and immortal it binds men together in a universal brotherhood. Every great revolution is marked with its imprint, and reveals it in its origin and aim. Heralds of a new world. we must found a moral unity, the Catholicism of Humanity And we move encouraged by the holy promise of Jesus we seek the new Gospel, of which He left us, ere He died, the immortal hope, and of which the Christian Gospel is the germ, as man is the germ of HUMANITY On the soil fertilised by fifty generations of mirtyrs, we hail with Lessing that immensity of future which finds its fulcrum in the Fatherland, and its goal in Humanity Then shall the peoples make a common covenant, and define in brotherly compact each one's mission in the future, the office which devolves on each in the general association, which owns one Law, one God for all It is for us to hasten the moment when the Revolution, the tocsip of the peoples, shall call together a new Convention, that shall be a true Council of the faithful Therefore our war must needs be a holy crusade Let God shine on our banner, as on our destinies Raise we on the old world's wreck an altar where the people may burn the incense of reconciliation. And know we all at least what answer to make to Him who would ask of us Whence come ye? In whose name do ye preach?

Often have I heard such questions Often has it been said of our little band of apostles "The republicans have no philosophic basis, no indisputable principle, as the fountain of their cred?" The accusers, it is true, were men who think they have a philosophy because some among their followers have made a collection of philosophies, a religion because they have priess, a political doctrine because they have priess, a political doctrine because they have by men of good faith, who could not fail to note in our ranks a visible lack of unity or of a harmonious philosophy, an absence of religious belief that could not be easily reconciled with the social and essentially appropriate that republicanism now and again pro-

Now, we are able to reply We come in the name of God and of HUMANITY

We believe in one God, author of all that exists, the living absolute Thought, of which our world is a ray and the Universe an incornation

We believe in one Law, general and immutable, that constitutes our mode of existence, that embraces every series of possible phenomena, and exercises a continuous influence upon the universe, and on all it contains, both in its physical and in its moral aspect.

Since every law requires an end to be attained, we believe in the progressive development in all existing things, of faculties and forces—which are faculties in motion—towards that unknown end, without which law would be useless and existence unintelligible

And since every law is interpreted and verified in its own subject, we believe in Humanity, a collective and continuous Being, in which is epitomised the whole ascending series of organic creations, and in which, as the sole interpreter of the law, is most fully manifested God's thought on earth

We believe, that masmuch as harmony between the subject and the laze is the condition of all normal existence, the manifest and immediate end of all our labours is to effect the greater completion and security of that harmony, through the fuller discovery of the law and its realisation in its subject and its reassation in its supres.

We believe in Association—which is but the active belief in one God, in one Law, in one End—as the only means possessed by us to realize Truth, as the method of progress, as the only existing road to perfection, so that the higher the scale of human progress the more embracing may be its corresponding formula of association won for men, and applied to their life.

association won for men, and applied to their life. We believe therefore in the HOLY ALLIANGE OF THE PROPLES as the broadest formula of association possible in our age—in the liberty and equality of the peoples, without which association has no true life—in Nationality, which is the conscience of the peoples, which assigns to them their share of work in the association, their office in HUMAINTY, and hence constitutes their mission on HUMAINTY, and hence constitutes their mission on the constitution of the mission on HUMAINTY, and hence constitutes their mission on his constitution of the constitutio

And since the LAW is one, since it governs equally the two aspects, internal and external, of the life of every being, the two modes of self and relativity, of the subjective and the objective that appertain to every existence. we believe for each people and its component individuals the same that we believe for HUMANITY and its component peoples. As we believe in the association of peoples, so we believe in association between the individuals who compose each nation, and in it as the sole means of their progress, the principle destined to govern all their institutions, and the pledge of concord in their labours. As we believe in the liberty and equality of the peoples, so we believe in liberty and equality among the men of each Country, in the inviolability of the ego, which is the conscience of individuals, and assigns to them their share of work in the secondary association, an office in the Nation, a special mission of citizenship in the sphere of the Fatherland And as we believe in HUMANITY, the sole interpreter of God's Law, so we believe for every State, in the PEOPLE, the sole master, the sole sovereign, the sole intermeter of the Law of Humanity which rules the mission of each Nation: in the People one and indivisible, that knows neither caste nor privilege, save that of Genius and of Virtue, neither proletariat nor aristocracy of land or money, but only faculties and active forces consecrated, for the good of all, to the administration of the surface of the globe, our common heritage -in the people free and independent, with an organisation that shall harmonise individual faculties and social thought, the people living by its own labour and the fruits thereof, pursuing in concord the greatest possible good of all, yet respecting the rights of the individual -in the people made one family, with one faith, one tradition, one thought of love, and advancing to the ever fuller accomplishment of its mission -in the people, progressive, consecrated to an apostolate of duties, never forgetful of a truth once won, never slacking its efforts because of that victory, reverent to the message of the generations, but resolved to use the present as a bridge betwirt past and future, worshipping revelation, not the revealers, able, little by little, to approach the soluton of its destiny here on earth

God and His Law, HUMANITY and its work of interpretation, progress, association, liberty, equality, the doctrine of the Propers, which is the vital principle of the republican Party, all meet on the common ground of our creed (a) We reject no conquest of the past Before us spreads a future where meet in close embrace the two eternal principles of every organisation, the individual and Humanity, liberty and association, where one philosophy, a geniume expression of religion, shall embrace in equal balance, every revelation of progress every holy idea which by providential design has been

"When before Young Europe's dawn all the altars of the old world have fallen, two altars shall be raised upon this soil that the divine Word has made fruitful. and the finger of the herald-people shall inscribe upon one, Fatherland, and upon the other, Humanity

"Like sons of the same mother, like brothers who will not be parted, the people shall gather around those two altars, and offer sacrifice in peace and love. And the incense of the sacrifice shall ascend to heaven in two columns that shall draw near each other as they mount, until they are confounded in one point, which is God

"And so often as they move asunder whilst they rise, fratricide shall be on earth, and mothers shall weep on earth, and angels in heaven "1

Now, suppose these things reneated in Europe, not as an expression of the individual, but as the expression, the Word, the Conscience of the republican Party, of the whole party of progress-suppose the religious principle to shine again on our path and unify our labourssuppose God and Humanity conjoined in our popular symbolism, as phenomenon and idea, thought and form, think ve not that our word would not kindle the doubttossed multitudes who pray, and wait, and hope, because no crusader's cry, no religious cry, sounds in their ears? Do you believe that between our HOLY ALLIANCE and the accursed compact, between the apostles of progressive free movement, and the stagnant sophists of old Europe. they would discern on which side stands God, his Love, his Truth? And where God is there is the neonle also The people's philosophy is its faith

And when fauth shows not only on your laps, but in your hearts, when your deeds answer to your words, and virtue hallows your lives as liberty hallows your minds, when as a band of brothers, believers in one flag, you appear before men as they who seek the good, when the people say of you, they are a leving faith,—think ye the people will be slow to answer to your call? Think ye that the guerdon desured of all, of saving power to all, which falls to them who shall herald the way to Europe, think ye that that will not be gathered, aye and quickly?

Great thoughts make great peoples Let your life be the entome of one great organic thought Widen the peoples' horizon. Free their conscience from the materialism that weighs it down Point them to a vast mission. Baptize them once again. Anger at wrong done to material interests can only bring forth revolts, principles alone effect revolutions Go back to first principles and the people will follow you.

The question which agitates the world is a religious question. Criticism and anarchy of belief have extinguished faith in the hearts of the peoples. A philosophy that constructs and unity of helief will require it.

sophy that constructs, and unity of belief, will revive it. Then-but not till then-will return that active energy which grows with difficulties, but now collapses at each trifling disappointment. Then will cease that state of isolation and mistrust which wearies us, which multiplies parties, obstructs association, makes of each individual a separate rallying point, which makes us camps enough but no armies to tenant them, which parts the poets to one side, the men of prose and calculation to the other. divides yet further the men of action, and further still the high speculative intellects Then we shall lose from our ranks those who dishonour us, the clan of unclean hearts and canting tongues, whose inconsistency of language and performance suggests doubt concerning our symbol, who prate of virtue, of self-sacrifice, of charity, while vice is in their hearts, shame on their foreheads, and selfishness in their souls, who nail their immorality on our banner, and hide themselves in the day of battle, to reappear when danger is past that they may gather the spoils of the vanguished and stain our triumph by robbing it of its fruits, / Then will disappear. one by one, the prejudices and the influence of those nameless, feeble men, who blame our war-cry because themselves lack courage, who beg at an ambassador's gate a dole of hope for their country, who drag the exile's sacred name in the mire of cabinet intrigues, who dream of salvation for the nations from the chicanery of diplomatists, men who ape in their conspiracies the rusty tricks of the police, who mock at enthusiasm, deny the power of inspiration and self-sacrifice, call martyrdom quixotic, and try to regenerate the peoples by statistics

Then will vanish the thousand inconsistencies that make the party inferior to its mission; patriots' lips listing foreigner almost as a reproach—what a blasphemy on the cross of Christ from men who call themselves Christians. republicans, and brothers-the guilty hesitation that robs so many of our friends of strength to confess their belief that frightens them at every charge made from the enemy's camp, that makes apostles of truth appear as erring and guilty men, that fascination of old names which, by supplanting principles, has ruined so many revolutions, and sacrificed fresh ideas to the petty traditions of the past, the illogical, inconsistent spirit that denies the oneness of mankind, that demands unlimited liberty for some and absolute intolerance for others. preaches political freedom and refuses literary freedom. which shakes the social edifice to its foundations, and petrifies religion Then we shall see no more the angry polemic that feeds on hatred, which snarls at every reminder, which neglects principles for personalities. which betrays in every sentence its jealous national exclusiveness, and wastes its strength in unimportant petty scuffles, and lastly, we shall lose the frivolity, the inconstancy of opinions, the forgetfulness of the martyrs who are our saints, of the great men who are our priests. of the great actions which are our prayer Faith, which is intellect, will, love, will blot out all those vices, and end the discords of a society without a church, without a head, that invokes a new world, but forgets to ask its secret from God And then, made fruitful by the breath of God and of holy beliefs, poetry, now exiled from a world that is a prey to anarchy, will blossom yet again, poetry, the flower of the angels, that martyrs' blood and mothers' tears have fed, that oft will grow amid ruins, but is ever coloured by a rising Sun It speaks to us in prophetic tones of Humanity, European in substance, national in form It will teach the Fatherland of the fatherlands to the nations still divided, it will translate into Ait the religious, social philosophy, it will surround with its own beautiful light, woman, who though a fallen angel, is ever nearer to heaven than we. It will besten

her redemption, restoring to her the mission of inspiration, of pity, and of prayer, which Christianity divinely symbolised in Mary It will sing the joys of martyrdom. the immortality of the vanguished, the tears that expiate, the sufferings that purify, the memories and the hopes, the traditions of one world interwoven in the cradle of another It will murmur words of holy consolation to those children of sorrow born before their time, those fated and puissant souls who, like Byron, have no confidants on earth, and whom the world of to day strives to rob even of God. And it will teach the young the greatness of self-sacrifice, the virtue of constancy and silence, how to be alone and yet despair not, how to endure without a cry an existence of torments half understood, unknown, long years of delusions and bitterness and wounds, all without a complaint, it will teach a belief in future things, an hourly travail to promote it, without a hope in this life of seeing its victory.

Are these illusions? Do I presume too much when I ask of faith such prodiges in a century still corrupted by scepticism, among men who are slaves of self, who love little, and quickly forget, who are troubled in soul, and heed only the calculations of egotism, and the sensations

No. 1 do not presume too much It is mecessary that this come I have that this come to pass, ape, and it will come I have faith in God, in the potency of truth, and in the sperit of the age I feel in the depths of my heart that we cannot stay as we are The principle which was the soul of the old world is exhausted It is for us to open the way to the new principle, and even should we perish in the attemptive will lead the way

The times were wrapped in shadow Heaven was a void. The peoples wandered, pricked by strange fears, or paused in torpid, puzzled wonderment. Whole nations disappeared, others just raised their heads as though to see them die A hollow sound as of dissolution was heard in the world All creation, earth and sky, trembled Man seemed in hideous case Placed between two Infinites, he knew neither, he knew not past nor future All behef was dead . dead the belief in the Gods, dead the belief in the public Society was not . nought but a Power that drowned in blood, or ate itself away in deeds of shame and sin, a senate, poor parody of the majesty that had been, which voted gold and statutes to the tyrant, pretorians who despised the one and slew the other, informers, sophists, and a slavish and obsequious multitude There were no principles of saving virtue there existed but the calculation of antagonistic interests The Fatherland was exhausted The solemn voice of Brutus from the tomb had told the world that Virtue was but a name And the good withdrew from that world, to keep their souls and intellects from stain. Nerva starved himself to death Thraseas made libation of his own blood to Tove the Liberator. The soul had disappeared the senses alone reigned. The people asked for bread and circus games Philosophy had become scepticism, epicureanism, or mere sophistries and words. Poetry was satire. From time to time man stood appalled at his own solitude. and drew back from the wilderness were heard at night by the wayside

Then voices of fear
Then the citizens, almost frenzied with dread, clasped the bare, cold statutes of the Gods that once they worshipped, and prayed of them a spark of moral life, a ray of faith, even some illusion, but they went away unheard, with despair in their hearts and blasphemy on their lips. Such were those times, so like our own

But yet, that was not the death-agony of the world, it was but the end of one phase of the world's evolution. A great epoch was exhausted, passing away to leave the road clear for another, whose first notes were already ringing in the north, and that awated only its initiator to declare itself. He came His was the soul most full of love, most virtuous and holy, most inspired by God and the future, that men have ever hailed on this earth: it was JESSUS He bent over the decaying world, and murmured in its ear a word of faith. To that obscene thing which retained nought but the aspect and notions of a man, he uttered words unknown up to that day; tone, self-searche, exlested origin. The dead arose, a new life thrilled through that obscene thing which philosophy had tred in wan to bring to life. From it came forth the Christian world, the world of liberty and coultily. Man was made manifest, the image and foreshadowing of God Jesus died. As Lamennas has sad, he asked of men to save them only a cross to die on. But ere he died, he amounced to the people the good next. To those who sked him whence he had it, he answered. From God the Father, and from the cross truce he called on Elim But from that cross his victory began, and still endures Have faith, then, O ye that suffer for the noble cause, apostles of a Truth that even to-day the world ignores, ye soldiers of the holy battles which the world condemns and calls rebellious To-morrow, perhaps, that world, to-day incredulous or careless, will bow with fervour before you. To-morrow, victory will crown your crusading banner Onward in faith, and fear not That which Christ did Humanity can do. Believe, and you will conquer Believe, and the peoples will end by following you Believe, and act Action is the Word of God passive thought is but its shadow. Those who sunder Thought and Action dismember God, and deny the eternal Unity of things Thrust them from your ranks, for whose is not ready to testify to his faith with his blood is no believer

From your cress of misfortune and persecution announce the whole fath of the Age, but few days will pass ere it receive its consecration of faith Let your lips not utter the cry of hate, nor the conspirator's hollow phrase, but the tanquit, solemn word of the days that are to come From our cross of poverty and proscription, we, the men of eale, who represent in our heart and faith the races of the enslaved, the millions doomed to silence, we will reply to you, and say to our bothers: the allianus is made. Hurl at your persecution the legend God and HUMANITY. For yet a little time they may tebel and strive against it and stammer blasphemy. But the masses will worship it

There was a day in the sixteenth century, in Italy, in Rome, when men called inquisitors, who pretended to have science and authority from God, were gathered together to decree the immobility of the Earth Before them stood a prisoner Genius illumined his face. He had outstripped his times and his fellow-men, and revealed the secret of a world

He was Galileo

He shook his bald and venerable head. The soul of that sublime old man rose in rebellion against the senseless violence of men, who would have forced him to deny the truth that God had taught him But long oppression had tamed his former energy Frightened by the threats of those monks, he was at the point of vielding He raised his hand to swear, even he, the immobility of the Earth But as he raised his hand, he lifted his weary eyes to the sky which he had scanned during long nights, to read in it a line of universal law, they caught a ray of that sun which he knew to be fixed in the centre of the revolving spheres. Remoise pricked his heart, and a cry in his own despite escaped from the depths of his soul STILL IT MOVES

Three centuries have passed away Inquisitors, inquisition, the senseless propositions that force dictated, all have disappeared But still the Earth moves on, its motion proved beyond a doubt, and still the words of Galileo soar over the generations of Mankind Lift thy countenance to the sun of God, thou child of Humanity. and read that legend in the heavens: it moves. Faith and action The future is ours

NOTES TO FAITH AND THE FUTURE

(x) Act, I say, but, by making this principle of Action a standard of conduct, I do not mean action at any price, feverish disorganised, unreflecting action I mean Action as a principle, a programme, a banner, as that which ought to be the tendency and avowed end of all our strivings. The rest is a question of time, with which it is futile now to concern ourselves. It is sufficient for us that a temporary necessity be not elevated to a permanent theory, that the peoples be not deluded into substituting for revolutionary activity an indefinite. uncertain, peacefully progressive force of events, that we no longer persist in handing over the great illumining power of the revolutionary philosophy, to a spasmodic, coldly critical work of constituted opposition We reject the systematic want of movement, the silence that broods. the dissimulation that betrays, we invoke the frank, loval preaching of our doctrine Ours is the cry of Aiax We want to fight in the open day illumined by the light of heaven Is this childish impatience? No it is the complement of our doctrine, the baptism of our faith The principle of action that we inscribe on our banner is closely bound up with our belief in a new Age How shall we initiate it save by the people and by Action, the Word of the people? Without this principle of Action. which we take as the standard of our efforts, we should only produce a purely reactionary movement, and hence an imperfect, superficial, material change of things the list word of the exprining Age rather than the first word of the age which the mneteenth centrum initiates, are already indicated in an article "On the Revolutionary Initiative," buildished in the Revolutionary of 1835, and I intend to develop my argument further when the opportunity offers? I shall then perhaps be permitted to prove that, in subjecting the past to a new test, I am seeking, in the historical evolution of the stages of progress, data for a new social aim, a new European philosophy that shall shift the new departure from a mnet predominant people, in order to communicate to all that contains a common anticipation, but only dearer that thought may be translated into fact, that the vicious circle in which our activity is confined may be bloken, and a decisive battle forced between the two principles that are now struggling for mastery in Europe

(2) My ideas on the French Revolution, considered as

It was said, in the pleamble to my atticle in the Revue
"Ought we to forget facts in order to improvise, by merely wishing it, a Revolutionary force where it does not really exist? Can we blot out the past? Can we leave out of our calculations the Revolutions of Modena and Bologna?"

Theoretically, the position in which we are placed by our religious and philosophical belief leaves us untouched by any argument deduced from those facts We are near to one of those periods of regeneration which, by introducing a new element into the great terrestrial scheme of life, generates new forces and shifts the central point of all questions We hail the dawn of a new age The Revolution of which we have a presentiment will embrace a large part of Humanity Now, every new purpose calls into action new forces latent in the peoples But, putting aside the main question, why do our critics forget that in Italy the people-the only true Revolutionary force-has never entered the lists , that our insurrections never went outside the circle of a military or bourgeois caste; that the masses were never called upon to share in the undertaking? Why do they forget that the insurrection never assumed an avowed Italian character? Why argue from the monarchical risings of 1821 to the prejudice of the republican insurrection for which we are striving? How possibly calculate the results of a principle by studying the consequences of a contrary principle? Between us republicans of "Young Italy" and those who laboured before us, between those who desire to move the masses with the cry of "God and the People" and the inconsistent, timid men who forget God and fear the People. a great gulf is fixed

"The risings of Modena and Bologna failed because France did not support them." True How is it possible for an insurrection not to fail when betrayed by the very principle upon which its life was based? Now, this principle on which the leaders of the Italian

Insurrection took their stand was the principle of nonintervention And blind faith in non-intervention prevented them from taking the steps that self-preservation demanded in order to work out their salvation. The masses were repulsed, the young discouraged, every force that had a germ of life ignored, they omitted to procure arms, they denied the idea of Nationality, they confined the area of the insurrection within the limits of a single province Are these permanent causes of weakness? From then till now every Italian who has not perverted his national sentiment in the conventions of the Parisian puste malieu will reply that if our forces are still sterile, if even to-day we number so many martyrs and so few fighters, we owe it mainly to the doctrine that the initiative of the European struggle devolves upon France, and that when she will not stir no one must attempt to move. It is urgent, therefore, to combat this doctrine preached among us by those very men who, from then resources in means and influence, should be first to take action. It is a doctrine that destroys the conscience and future of the peoples, a doctrine which the French republicans ought to join with us in fighting. I do not therefore blame France I only ask the republican Press to introduce the new tendencies and language that correspond to the new mission But I deservedly blame the men who, living in the midst of oppressed peoples, increase the difficulties of the work of emancipation by the insincere belief that marks worse than lukewarm convictions . I blame those who boast themselves the apostles of a humanitarian philosophy, and yet, with their theory of a single revealer and their rejection of the continuity of progress, sink by stress of logic to the rejection of the doctrine of the intelligence and sovereignty of the people, only to evoke some vague revival of the Papacy, I blame the men who declare Humanity to be impossible until France be hailed Queen of the universe (See Histoire Parlementaire de la Révolution Française-Christ et le Peuple, par A Siguier) And this is not an isolated thought of one individual, it is the doctrine of a whole school Now, we protest against the doctrine of that school, against its national egotism, its tendencies to trespass on others' rights. Brothers of all who desire the Association of the equal and free, we feel a special affection for that people which for fifty years has fought for the emancipation of the nations, and translated into the sphere of politics the grand results of the Christian Ace.

Age (3) It is an erior to base our estimate of the work of moral freedom achieved by the Reformation upon the accident of a protest against the Diet of Spiles, from which the term protestantism originated Protestantism was not, as the neo-Christians affirm, a negation, a work of criticism in relation to the age. It was a positive Christian product, a solemn manifestation of the individual -which is the aim of Christianity It protested, doubtless, but only against the Papacy, which by desiring what it was unable to perform, and attempting to establish a social unity with an individualistic instrument, was necessarily fated to degenerate into tyranny and thus place itself outside that Christian philosophy of life which, before it had attained its complete development. said to man, "Be free," It is not therefore a protest against the philosophy of its age, but in favour of the philosophy which the Papacy, impotent to realise a sublime instinct of the future, destroyed instead of developing

(4) No one can reasonably charge us with ignoring the exholic spirit that presides over the destines of the carbolic spirit that presides over the testines of the carbolic spirit to the fact that every religion by its nature tends to become catholic, and notably so the philosophy that writes Humanity at the head of its arricles of faith.

(5) I anticipate the objection: "Success is a delusion slavery, inequality, remain everywhere. The struggle was scarcely begun by the French Revolution. The individual still dominates every question, and while you talk of a new age, unanswered pmyers are raised on every side imploring that the social ideal delared by you to be exhausted, may even now be attained and translated into fact "

We must not confound the discovery of an element of progress with its realisation and triumph, the ideal evolution of the thought of an age with its material application, the conquest with its practical consequences The positive application of a given principle to the different parts of the political, economic, and civil organism cannot successfully begin except its moral development in men's minds be completed. That development constitutes the work of an Age Scarcely is it completed when some power-an individual or a people-proclaims its results and hands its formula to the nations Then a new Age has already begun, in which, while men's minds are working at the newly revealed principle, the gradual completion is effected of the principle of the dead or dying Age The thought of one Age is only realised when the mind is already fixed upon the ideal of the new Age Were this otherwise, the chain that connects the Ages would be broken, and what is termed a lapse of continuity would take place

Now I affirm, that if on the one hand the material application of the two principles, liberty and equality, that constituted the doctrine of the individual, be not effected-nor will it be effected until a people has marked the new principle as the end and aim of the common task-yet, on the other hand, their development is morally accomplished I maintain that the unknown factor of the Middle Ages can now be placed in the category of known quantities, that what was hypothesis is now an axiom, that the theory has become an admitted, recognised law Who denies liberty or equality? Who doubts the Right? The most illiberal king speaks in the name of that liberty he abhors in his heart. If we may believe him, he is protecting the liberties and rights of his subjects against the anarchy of factions The question is decided in the sphere of principles the only difference of opinion relates to its application. We dispute, not about the law, but about its interpretation

The individual is now no longer the end of our labours. He, even he, indeed, will be seen to be sacred when the social law is proclaimed, and we are bound to bring our duties and rights into harmony with it, while the worship of individuality has given place to an ignoble individualism, to egotism, to a nameless ımmorality

(6) Association, say some, is no new principle, it cannot therefore, as the objective of the forces of mankind, constitute a new system or induce its necessity Association is nothing but a method, a means for realising liberty and equality It belongs to the old system. and we see no necessity for a new one

Association, I admit, in its more general signification. is no more than the method of progress, the means by which it is gradually achieved. To every step forward there corresponds a new degree of force, a new expansion of association. And in this sense, so far as we are concerned, association began with the progress that is coeval with the origin of our planet Its work appeared in every dead philosophy, most of all in that which men wish to see dominant to-day

Nevertheless, though association has always exercised an influence upon us, it has been without our knowledge Men were unconsciously under its influence. Thus it was with progress, with the law of gravitation, with all great physical and moral truths. They were at work before they were revealed.

But is there not a difference between an undiscovered law and one that is proclaimed, recognised, accepteda difference sufficient to change the starting-point of intellectual labour? The law, when defined, imposes a duty on us of ruling our actions in accordance with it The fulfilment of the law becomes an end for all our efforts, and the study of every thinker is how to derive the greatest possible results from it. Minds no longer risk going astray and osing precious time in researches whose object has been already obtained Forces are increased a hundredfold by concentration they work in a determined direction. Formerly the instinct of law

The great historical ages date, not from the birth of a law, a truth, a principle, but from their promulgation Were this not so, it would be absurd to speak of distinct ages or philosophies Truth is one and eternal: thought, the germ of the world in God. contains it all.

Equality existed in principle long before Jesus, and the world was unconsciously tending towards it. Why, then, recognise the Christian age?

The earth did not want for the revelations of Copernicus or Galileo, or the formulas of Newton, to describe its orbit round the sun Why, then, do we recognise the two distinct astronomical Ages of the Proleman and Newtonian systems? And, coming nearer to the present day, did not the theories of the English economists, and those, too quickly forgotten, of the St Simonnan, mark our two midcally different periods of economic science? Yet the only difference between them is the substitution of the principle of association for that of liberty

Now, we believe the time has arrived for the principle of association to be solemily and universally proclaimed and become the centre of all study, theoretical and and become the centre of all study, theoretical and principles and the second of the centre of the second of the centre of the second of the constructions, our codes of law, the articles of our faith And furthermore, I maintain that the promulgation of a principle which marks out an entirely new direction for our studies is sufficient to constitute, or at least to indicate a new Age, if nothing more

And, moreover, our motto is not Association merely it implies the association of Europe, and by its means of Humanity in all its faculties and forces, with the necessary conditions of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity, for the purpose of achieving a common rad, namely, the discovery and progressive application of its law of life.

(7) Right is obviously a secondary idea, a deduction which forgets the principle it sprang from, a mere consequence which has been inflated to an absolute and independent doctrine. Every right exists in virtue of a law, the law of Being, the law that defines the nature of the subject treated. Where is this law? I do not know. Its discovery is the aim of the present Age, but the certainty of its existence is enough to make us substitute the idea of abuy for that of right

(8) The word demogracy, although when endowed with historical precision it may express vigorously enough the ideal of a world, at least of the ancient world, is, like all the political phrases of antiquity, unequal to the conception of the future Age which we republicans are called to initiate The expression social government would be preferable as indicating the conception of association, which is the life of the Age democracy was inspired by an idea of rebellion, sacred indeed, but still rebellion Now, every such conception is evidently imperfect and inferior to the idea of Unity which will be the doctrine of the future. There is a note of strife in the word democracy it is the cry of Spartacus, the expression of a people in its first attempt "Social government," "Social institutions," represent a people organising itself after victory extinction of aristocracy will efface the name democracy

(a) We are not expounding a doctrine, but a series of bases for belief, disjointed and merely stated, but nevertheless sufficient to indicate the nature of our religious and philosophical conceptions. Our political beliefs are only consequences more or less direct and evident It is easy to understand how the mere fact of preaching a new age, and a new philosophy of life. separates us from all who believe themselves to be carrying on the old principle, and entrust a new development only to those nations who are guardians of the highest expression of progress yet attained to principle that a new system of philosophy must include all the elements of the preceding philosophies besides its own, is the formal rejection of every theory that destroys and does not harmonise, of every political school which only asks to substitute one class for another. one social element for another, of every exclusive system which, like that of Babœuf, destroys liberty for the sake of a chimerical, deceptive equality, which eliminates the most sublime moral factor, that of the ego, and renders all progress impossible, or which, like the American School, centres itself in the individual. solves every political problem in the sense of liberty alone, smothers the principle of association under the omnipotence of the ego, condemns progress to the irregularities of a fitful, intermittent movement which defies calculation, plants distrust in the civil organisation, dismembers social unity in an independent dualism of the temporal and spiritual powers, and introduces materialism, individualism, egotism, and contradiction into the minds of men through the doctrine of the atheism of the law and the sovereignty of rights and interests Our conception of Humanity as the sole interpreter of the Law of God separates us from every School that divides progress into two distinct Ages, confines it almost by force within one single defined philosophy or religion, or which imprisons the traditions of Humanity in the theory of one sole revealer, or which breaks the continuity of our labours by the theory of a constant supernatural intervention. by the theory of a series of complete dispensations without relation to each other, by a chain of social formulas all revealed, all sundered by a void between principle of the People, which is simply the application of the doctrine of Humanity to every nation, is the direct and sufficient cause of the principle of universal suffrage, which is the manifestation of the people, and of the exclusion of all authority that is not delegated by the people, or is exercised by one caste or individual The principle of association, considered as the sole method of progress, involves unlimited liberty for all associations for secondary or special objects not in conflict with the moral law The principle of moral unity, without which association is impossible, implies the duty of a general elementary education to expound the programme of such association to all who will be partners in it Lastly, the principle that declares the individual sacred and involable, carries with it not only the absolute liberty of the press, the absolute hierty of the press, the absolute property of the press, the absolute property of the press, the the p

But a present such an identifica-tion could only work harm. The Church taught doctrines that intelligence could not accept. The men who ruled the State were too limited in their ideale to be entrusted with spiritual authority the future social unity lay outside their comprehencing, and their only logical position was to apply outlande their comprehension, and their only logical position was of spily the principle of liberty all round. THE PATRIOTS AND THE CLERGY

October 7, 1835.

"THERE is no power on earth that surpasses or equals that of the Clergy, when they are imbued with the genius of a nation, and guide it faithfully in its natural progress according to the laws that direct the procession of its life. But if, by error or from interest, they set themselves in opposition to those eternal laws, if they attempt to hold the people in a state which it knows to be not good, and so block the roads to the Future, they lose thereby the power they had. Their words excite mistrust, they are involved in the hate born of the evil they have tried to perpetuate, and the people regard them as the enemy. Once they lived by the love the People gave them for their own trust in it, now faith and love have vanished, their living force is spent, and voices of scorn and cursing are the only obsequies that follow their dishonoured bier-

"Ireland and Poland have given, and still give, us the example of a clergy strong in its union with the People whose rights they have ever defended. But where the presthood ranges tiself with despotism against the People, what is its fate? Will the Anghean clergy save a decrepit aristocracy rejected by the nation? Will the Spanish monks perchance place the legitimate Don Carlos on the throne of Philip the Second? Will they restore the system under which Spain has suffered so much and fallen so low? Yet, is there another country where the millionec characteristic of their organisation was more widely diffused it But yesterday men spoke of Monkish Spain, to-morrow, probably they will seek in vain from one end of the peninsula to the other a single remnant of those who but a short time since were so powerful."

of those who but a short time since were so powerful?

He who recently wrote these grave and true words is a Christian and republican priest, who spent half his kife combating the movement towards freedom of those Peoples whom God is urging to an unknown end One day, perhaps while reading the Gospel over again with all the faith of which a man is capable, he perceived that he had erred, he reconsidered his position, and, like a man of high intellect and pure conscience, he confessed his error Then, after having at Rome looked his idol in the face, he returned a sad and disillusioned man, and placed himself at the head of the crusade which the men of progress in all countries have proclaimed in Christ's name for the Poole's cause

We, on our side, have long felt the need of expressing something similar, to that portion of the Swiss clery, which is reactionary at heart and takes its orders from Rome and Vienna alike, which fights, without rest and apparently with some definite purpose, against that national progress which leads our people to new conquests of science and liberty and equality

quests of science and liberty and equality Between the dark plots of one party and the growing sritation of the other, our feeble voice will not perhaps be listened to to-day. Our words will pass by like so many others, barren and unheeded, none the less, we are forced to utter them, if only to discharge a duty to our conscience. In the party which we are apt perhaps to much in Voliairan fashion to prejudice under the name of the derical party, there are men of good faith, men who are not preverse but only misled, devout souls, whose sincerty and seal only serve the machinations of those who libed the patrots and liberalism, who paint the former as the enemies of all religion, and insult the latter by giving it the characteristics of anarchy. To those we offer sincere words of peace and fratternity, because, although they have turned to reactionary ways, they represent in the Church what we are accustomed to respect wherever it shows itself-faith and religious feeling The others, conspirators and reactionaries by system, only represent class interests and greed and lust of power For those we only feel contempt

We must leave on one side all that touches the present time we attach no importance to intrigues of the moment or petty local encroachments, they were easily foreseen The coups d'état that have lately taken place in France could not fail to find a certain correspondence among us Rome, Paris, St Petersburg, Vienna, and Berlin, all form an alliance of homogeneous elements, so many links in a chain, so many fires that radiate in unison their sinister flashes, now singly, now together, and just at the present moment we see their united flare. The word of command was passed round that the whole chain should move. Hence there is no need to wonder at all those petty plots that are being hatched and unhatched in the night, and will perish in the night, unless they win a fictitious importance. We are bound to say that, if considered in a merely political light, the question does not seem to us worthy of serious attention . nor do the acrid polemics started on the subject by some cantonal newspapers deserve it. So far as we are concerned, we recognise in politics neither clerical party, nor catholic party, nor romanist party. From our point of view there are only two great parties the progressive and the reactionary. They are composed of individuals of every order, of every rite, of every sect But neither order, nor rite, nor sect should save the factious from punishment Governments have the right to control and repress any individual interest which disturbs the social order, or arbitrarily overrides or excepts itself from the public law (which is the bond and seal of association for all the inhabitants of a country), and thus revolts de facto against the common weal. But, outside the circle within which this legitimate authority may be exercised, there is not, and cannot be, especially in the existing state of things, any rule save full and perfect liberty, liberty for every citizen and every opinion, it matters not whether they be reactionary or progressive; liberty for all actions that have naturally the sanction and support of the public law. In the present state of theories and facts, every question of religious worship and organisation is a question of the public law and liberty. So long as the actions and pretensions of a sect, or of any religious association, do not exceed the limits of its own constitution, or do not touch the civil order of society, you have no right to interfere. The intervention of Government can only be applied at the present day to actions that directly violate existing laws. The rest belongs to the sphere of ideas, and is a question of belief Reform belief, spread the light, meet fanatical newspapers with other newspapers Do not thwart the work of the patriots, do not obstruct their progress with unjust suspicions, or a disgraceful and cowardly compliance with the demands of foreign courts, or an obvious disposition to stagnate in the status quo. Defend the free press instead of being frightened by it, and have no other fears Allow the Pope to select at his pleasure bishops who are foolish, and ignorant, and out of touch with the times what can they do other than hasten the downfall of the papal power 2. Let the Tesuits and others of the factious make expensive journeys, hold their conferences, write their wretched articles, their contemptible and mept pamphlets. suffer them to go their ways. Persecution would only exalt them by giving them an excuse to pose as victims, it would invest them with an importance that neither their writings, nor their meetings, nor the intrigues in which they exhaust themselves could ever win for their sect The old Catholicism is dying let it struggle even in its death-throes Its death-blow will come from some idea that shines with the light of truth, not from the hammer of restrictive laws. All the regulations and curbs you may invent will not be worth one single school of thought

time of the Baden Conference, an opinion supported afterwards, if our memory serves us rightly, by a daily paper that gave effective assistance to the cause of progress in Geneva we mean the "Europe Centrale" There is a conception which must one day (we, at least, have no doubt) harmonise, or rather identify the two Powers of Church and State, but until this is clear and definite in the mind and conscience of the Nations, until political thought rises to the height and sacredness of a religious idea, and true social unity is established, till then ecclesiastical and political authority should be exercised freely, and, so far as possible, independently of each other on distinct lines Their respective activities must not clash, and hence they must not interfere with each other. Each has the right to associate itself with whomever it pleases, to receive inspirations from any source it likes, to pay those whom it chooses and accepts as the interpreters of its religion and the rulers of its conscience. So long as ecclesiastical bodies do not overstep the limits of the religious sphere in which they move, it is within their power to do whatever they please. and propagate their beliefs by speech or writing in the way that seems good to them We do not fear the influence of political or religious prejudices where we are allowed a free hand and a fair field to confute them We do fear-if for nothing else, for the example of a dangerous precedent-the intervention of Government where it is not absolutely required by the force of circumstances We wish to concede the smallest possible amount of power to the present Governments. just because we have no faith in them. Nor do we expect from their efforts any fruit of national progress. because we suspect that, while they accentuate certain questions under the colour of religion, their only purpose is to distract public attention from national questions. In 1830 the conquest of Algeria was designed to conceal from the French-a brilliant and chivalrous peoplethe odious nature of the projected decrees. And now, in our case, it is perhaps not too daring to presume, that the ostentatious energy displayed against the foolish encroachments of the ultramentane clergy has been merely used to defend the want of energy in dealing with political encroachments much more pernicious. We desire to substitute for governmental influence quite another weapon We should wish to see the activity necessary to progress transferred from that influence to a national Centre We should like to find the breach less often filled by the Authority of the law, and more often by the men of progress, not excluding those members of the Christian priesthood who are equally inspired by the love of fatherland and liberty The latter should place themselves as apostles of truth and light between the people, who have straved through lack of education, and the leaders of agitations. They should apply the activity and constancy that evil-minded priests give to the cause of Satan and his powers of darkness, to the defence of Christ's heritage-that is to say, equality and the improvement of the greatest number.

With these premises we purpose ascending to the social question, and, from the Pisgah of a religious conception and of the future destines of the People—or ather of the Peoples—to address, with faith in our own rectitude, with our hand on our heart, the following words to the erring members of the clerky.

October 10, 1835

In the name of Christ, whither are you hastening? In the name of Hum who walked with the People and whom the mighty put to death, why walk you with the mighty? Why do you abandon the People's cause? Why do you stand aloof from those who hold His banner on high and seek to translate into facts the teachings of Christ?

Christ said "Love God first, and love ye one another with brotherly affection"

And He also said: "He who would be first among you let him be the servant of all"

In those words is comprehended the whole essence of Christianity Unity of faith, mutual love, human brotherhood activity in good works, the doctrine of self-sacrifice, the affirmation of the doctrine of equality, the abolition of all aristocracy, the perfecting of the individual, and liberty, without which neither love nor perfection can exist-all this is summed in those two precepts.

If we inscribe on our honner the words Liberty. Equality, Humanity, we become the heralds of a Christian faith. We seek the unity of belief that Christ promised for all Peoples, for all the earth We are neither Catholics nor Protestants the true doctrine of Christ has made Christians only. If we cry to the Masses "God and the People! There is only one master in heaven. God one master on the earth, the People; the whole People associated in an active belief, fruitful in peace and love, in order to advance under the eye of God to the knowledge and interpretation of his universal law," we take upon ourselves the office of Christ's apostles. Christ came for all: He spoke to all and for all. He did not have one teaching for some, another for others. He spoke from the Mount in the same language to all who crowded around Him He hurled His anathema against the Scribes and Pharisees, who were the men of caste, the privileged classes of His time Before His coming there were, in the opinion of the world, two natures of men-the nature of the master and the nature of the slave He destroyed this fallacy He proclaimed the unity of human nature by teaching the unity of its origin \ He burst the chains of servitude He raised up the People and died for it-

And if we follow out His teachings to their consequences, if we try to apply them to civil society, if we protest with all our might against every opposition, every inequality, every violation of His Holy Word, we incarnate in our very selves the moral teaching of Christ labouring for His faith, for the salvation and organisation of the Church of Humanity, which is the congregation of the believers in that faith Since man was made in the image of God, we are labouring that human society may be fashioned, so far as possible, in the image of the divine society, of that celestial country where all are equal, where the same love and the same happiness exist for all We seek to learn the ways of God upon the earth because we know that this earth was given to us as the workshop of our labour, because only by fulfilling His task upon it, does man become worthy to ascend to heaven, because we know we are to be judged by our works in this world, by the help we have given to the poor, by the consolation we have shown to the afflicted We may not lock ourselves up in barren and selfish prayer for our own souls, while the cry of the poor and oppressed smites our ears, nor turn away our faces from our neighbour, and be content with our own spiritual progress, while all around us is falling to wreck, while the country that God has given us is in danger of a dishonourable death from the despotic influence of the foreigner, and the germs of anarchy that vitiate its institutions, while those who should be first to expel the evils that threaten us allow themselves to drift on in fatuous security, and prostitute the house of God to foreign insolence and that base trickery that goes by the name of diplomacy The law of God has not two measures. It is the law for heaven as for earth. We cannot wish that our immortal spirit should deny on earth the gift of liberty, which is the source of Good and Evil in human actions, and whose exercise constitutes in the eyes of God the virtuous and the wicked man 4 We cannot wish that the brow that was made to lift itself to heaven should bend in the dust before any man, whoever he may be, nor suffer that soul which aspires to eternal Truth to grovel in the mire, ignorant of its rights, its power, and its noble origin. We cannot call ourselves Christians, and permit men, instead of loving one another like brothers, to be selfish, hostile, divided, city from city, canton from canton, nation from nation. We therefore preach Association as the means of general perfectibility liberty, equality, human dignity, enfranchisement from all servitude, the progress of all institutions, the sacredness of every land from the invader, the honour and well-being of every People, an alliance of all nations, the destruction by free speech of all preguidess. We preach the doctrine of the Ritherland*, the abode and temple of our race, the doctrine of Immunity that Christ amounced, the ambit and bond of fellowship of all countries, who shall be free and independent, but saters in one faith, one love, one Gospel.* And when we preach these things, we are ready, in feeds be, to seal them with our blood, to die as Christ died for their realisation and the salvation of all mers.*

of all mens Now, these ideas germinated at the foot of the cross of Christ-of the Christ you serve For eighteen hundred years they have been permeating the world, now under one, now under another form; to-day they are applied to politics, a short time since to the movement of the intellect Their virtue destroyed feudalism, abolished in nearly every country the aristocracy of blood, and is about to deal it the last blow in feudal England. The princes of Europe leagued themselves against these ideas, the forces of all the privileged classes were often gathered to oppose them, but in the end every one of their attempts failed Those ideas seemed to fall vanquished, you would have said they were banished for ever from the world, yet they reappeared They were drowned in blood, and they reappeared In one age they were condemned to the fires of the Inquisition, in another to the gallows of kings; and they reappeared more potent, more ubiquitous, more threatening than ever. They invaded the armies assembled to destroy them, the tribunals called to condemn them, and even the remnants of those very aristocracies that had been wounded to death by them They marched to a national crusade in Poland under the hanner of the mother of Christ In the name of the cross of Christ they gave back Greece to Europe They move the world, advancing between victory and martyrdoma And do you call movements like these the work of a sect? In this potency of new life that is agitating the whole of society, can you see nothing but the underground work of a few conspirators? In this ever increasing sound of Peoples issing in their might, of multitudes who desire to found a better future, of oppressed acess that demand their place in the light of the sun, do you see orthing but the effect of an obscure word thrown at a venture to the crowd, by a few factious men?

Men of the clergy, clear your minds of cant! There is in this an influence more serious and potent than the vain conceit of a writer, or some rebels' plot 'The stake is the whole destiny of the civilised world, ordered and impressed by the finger of God on the heart of the generations. It sweeps you also along with it in its advance-xli involves a law of continual progress of which we are the conscious or unconscious agents, and without which there would be neither life, nor progress, nor religion. If you oppose it, you are fighting against. Christ, against God, and against.

Humanity—God's interpreter on earth

Now, do you realise the effect of this impotent strife of yours? Do you see the fruit of your exertions among the Peoples whom you wish to fetter?

It is the fruit of scepticism, of doubt, of negation It is the fruit of anarchy in belief, and all the immorality that has its roots therein Its offspring are violent reactions, excesses of civil anger, the fires of Bristol, or of the Spanish convents, It dissociates religion from the great humanizarian movement It dishonours the priest and the altar. It destroys the temple It has ruined the people, and will ruin, if you persevere long in your reactionary path, the Christian faith and its future

We addressed a few words to the authorities to this effect —Interfere as little as possible in religious questions. Allow them to develop freely in the field of ideas, do not be frightened by a few impotent, secret agitators, who have no definite purpose, and are condemned to fall of themselves into oblivion. Do not be irritated by the vagaries of the factious Catholic press, because the universal contempt will set them at their value. The future unity of the human family-social unity-is beyond your comprehension, belonging as you all do, body and soul, to the old school and the old age Your sole principle is liberty, nothing more At least be consistent, and desire liberty in all things, liberty for all, for religious society as for political society Watch over and punish acts that directly touch public order, the liberty and safety of the citizens. Punish them from whatever quarter they proceed, but do not claim attributes outside your functions, or make yourselves dictators in matters that do not concern you Be not overzealous to prevent, since that is not your province

The public law is sufficient to repress And we said to the factious priests, to the priests who sell Christ a second time to the aristocracy and the Princes of the earth :- Beware! You are few in number, and fallen from your high estate, fallen because of the countless faults of your leaders; because they have deserted the People's cause for that of their masters, the cause of the poor for that of the idle rich LYou are fallen, because you have wedded religion to material things, because you have made of public worship an empty ceremony, and divided the sons of God, cursing some and blessing others, while Christ came to preach and pray and die for all What is your object? The world moves, progress is its law, the patriots are the faithful, the apostles of that law . Would you try to stop the world, or infringe the law that God has given it, or strive against his anostles? That is not in your power Your opposition may indeed awaken tremendous reactions, increase the germs of discord which already exist, foment irreligion and scepticism, discredit Christianity as you have discredited Catholicism Is this your will? So be it but think upon it, and remember that the flames of the Spanish convents are but a reflection from the fires on which the

To-day we are forced to speak to you-priests. natriots, men in authority, protestants and catholics, The few words we are about to say are directed to

- The reaction is fatal to us, each of us in this wretched age absorbs some of its venom. There is a spirit of hatred abroad that corrupts our best thoughts with mutual hostility and mistrust. We talk of peace and have curses on our lips, we speak of liberty and fatherland in a tyrant's accents We struggle without purpose for the mere love of strife. This is the source of that opposition of detail, which exhausts its strength on minute points when it does not descend to personalities. makes a great ado about netty applications of principles. and then neglects the most important aspects of the principles themselves This is the origin of that cantonal. parochial, sectarian spirit that predominates in all great national and humanitarian conceptions, in all the ouestions on which depends in the last resort the peaceful and orderly adjustment of our destinies -

- We are forced to steer between Scylla and Charybdis. the intolerance of the priests, and the intolerance of the patriots. On either side we find a spirit of nure reaction and destruction. The former, out of hatred to Voltaire and Rousseau-who nevertheless were as great believers as any of them-would wish to abolish the printingpress, destroy books, close schools, enthrone ignorance, do violence to conscience. To listen to their pious eloquence you would imagine them inquisitors in full function The latter, because they happened to encounter bigots and fanatics, because they saw despotism disguising itself under the cloak of religion, and the teaching of Christ corrupted in the hands of Pones. deny religion, faith, and even religious philosophy They become materialists, sceptics, or, what is worse, indifferent. They ignore the great services that strong beliefs have rendered to the cause of Humanity They gnore how much there is that is noble and sublime and potent in faith in a great religious principle. They forget that religion is immortal, that it, it is born with the world, and "nill endure as long as the world shall endure," I and that materialistic theories lead directly to the principle of individual interest, and hence to egotism and all its attendant evils

Yet, above all these petty contests of diocesan elections, of examinations, of jurisdiction, there exist some thing immeasurably greater, hoher, more vital for the Church, and conscience, and faith Above all the ecclesiastical diarrhes, the futile demands of the particular absurdates of which the so-called religious question is composed, there is something whose essence is independent from, and alten to, all these squabbles, something immeasurably more important for our future, for our social condition, for the growth of our Country.

We mean THE RELIGIOUS SENTIMENT

The religious sentiment is the divine fount of all religions, of all beliefs that have God for their beginning and Humanity for their end, and which are animated by the spirit, without which every belief is passive and barren, every religion no more than a sect, every faith but a tradition, a habit, and outward profession

It is the religious sentiment which hallows the thoughts and actions of Man, that ennobles the human creature in his own eyes, and gives him the consciousness of a mission to fulfill. It gives him the sense that God has not east him at a venture upon this earth of tral, but that his existence is a function of universal life and harmony, a link in the great chain of beings, a necessary point in the line that connects Man with God and our earth with His universe it is that which makes all his life a scene of self-senfice and charity

The religious sentiment is brotherhood, and association, and love. From it flow strength and constancy in the struggle for these great principles, indifference to danger, noble resignation in persecution and misfortune.

Such is the religious sentiment, by means of which alone you can advance along the path of progress, for materialism—be assured—however you may desire to consider it, will verily give nothing but the consciousness of your own individuality, the certainty of a few Rights, the power to use them or not at will, or the habit of seeking your own material success even at the cost of your brother's weal, wherever society does not rebel and allow it with impunity but you will never draw from materialism, either capacity for progress, or the virtue of self-scarfice and matividual.

Now, this religious sentiment is the foundation and bond of all social fellowship, the only pledge of security for the continuous and pacific progress of every people that desires to be a nation, since it unites the soils of men in one purpose, and refers to a gisterior law what real theories make the result of chance had the moment's belt and flow, thus planing under God's own tutelage the Rights, and happiness, and independence, and improvement of the Peoples How is it, then, we sak, that this religious sentiment is wrecked, and whither will it

sink? Where sink all good and great sentiments of the human soul, when it has no guide save a narrow, contentious, ambitious conception, where all religions sink when they forget the principle of love and brotherhood that launched them on their way, where all societies sank when they substitute mere opposition for real in good works, mistrust for unity, interests for duty The religious sentiment is declining day by day, is perishing amid petty contests, amid the irritation born of barren party strife, under the evil influence of an odious and reactionary policy Wherefore some among you-who are prone to confound ideas with those who bring them into discepute, and institutions with those who profess to represent them-speak evil of religion because it is administered by false priests, of sacred things because they are profaned by men, of beliefs because the blind and ambitious have falsely interpreted them. Others, conversely, deny progress because it was in some degree misunderstood, and condemn the patriots because they sometimes met in their ranks rogues and hypocrites. They deny holy Liberty, Equality, the People, Association, Humanity, because the long series of sacred and high-principled struggles was interrupted by the sad days of '93, when the People of France, goaded to excess, attacked by all monarchical Europe on one side, and domestic conspiracy on the other, swept along in a terrible and unprecedented flood of reaction and vengeance, that will never be repeated, because the circumstances that produced it can never be repeated anywhere...

This is our position to-day, and when perchance from one or the other of the two parties, some one comes forth to join us, seeking to free Truth from the bands of discord that swaddle it, we distrust him as a hypocrite with some secret, ulterior purpose, and we brand his quiet, honest conduct as mere strategy This is the attitude of the clergy towards the patriots. and this, too often, is the attitude of the patriots towards a part of the clergy, who perhaps need only to understand and believe in us in order to join our ranks Now, if the clergy were to rally to us, or rather to the holy belief that we preach concerning the words of Christ, would the scepticism they deplore be so general and hostile? If they ceased to struggle against the light of intelligence, and the movement that springs from it, would they be defeated and routed by it, and should we be divided from them? We fight against scepticism equally with them, and if we are not allowed a speedy conquest, the fault is theirs, who make Christ's law and God's progress the monopoly of a caste, who rob the masses of their heritage of common rights, and their fair share of the blessings that God has given to His creatures The clergy have the destinies of the Church in their own hands they will wreck it where they persist in the narrow and reactionary path that they have followed so long from excess of irritation, confound faith with its ministers. religion with the priest; if they were not too disposed to exceed the bounds of moderation in the great movement that urges us on , if they did not believe it their duty, through some feeling of mistaken dignity, to free themselves at the same time from the religious principles which alone can prepare the future, if they did not forget so often how our fathers, when preparing themselves for the battles of liberty, knelt before God, how they rose up stronger after prayer, and conquered in the fight, while we, though so proud and presumptuous before God, drag the national flag in the mud and let our country cringe to an ambassador, if the patriots acted otherwise, think you that all the clergy would oppose us? Think you not that honest and devoted men, who have erred in good faith, would part themselves from the majority, often greedy and radically immoral, and ioin us? And would you fear the predominance of what is called the clerical party anywhere, where the people found in you religion, the true religion, that shows itself in good works, that loves and consoles, and consecrates itself to the brethren ?

Rise to principles—to universals. Do not scorn truth because men have obscured it. Strive rather to free it from the errors which envelop it, and the prejudices which comput it Do not dash to pieces what has always been the instrument of great deeds because some fanatic has misconceived its omnipotent action. We are on the threshold of a great Age, the Age of the Peoples Learn to understand the vast, sublime, religious meaning of these words Rise to the height of your mission as men and cauzens. The co operation of all can alone achieve the work of all Seek such co-operation in all possible ways with that sincerity of soul that wills the good There must be no revenge, no premeditated hostility, no blind invectives against a whole order of persons. All general invectives are unjust. Grave for those who stays from the right path, but do not persecute them. Do not embitter your resentient with useless recrimination The past is nothing. Open your minds to our words, we begin a new work. Let the angel of peace and conord spread his wings over your young flag, and let the spirit of love proceed, not only from your lap, but from your hearts. Trust in God, in the goodness of your cause, and in the power of Truth. Be faithful, and you will conquer. To the priests we say Do not forget that all great revolutions are fulfilled by virtue of a law ordained of God to guide the motion of human affairs, and recognise that what is seething around you to-day is a great revolution, not a mere revolt. Its development is at work in the hearts of every People In spite of every obstacle, it has been gaining ground for the last fifty years, and everything militates in its favour-its persistent and cosmopolitan character, its audacity, its eloquence, its self-sacrifice, its martyr's crown. To stand apart and fight against it is to fight against God's will, and to part oneself from Humanity, the interpreter and executor of His commands, it is to stand aside from God and the movement of Humanity, it is self-destruction Remember that every social revolution must be either with you or against you, and that if you ally religion to resistance you wreck religion without profiting your cause Remember that the Church-THE CONGREGATION OF THE FAITHFUL-when it is not an instrument of progress becomes a corose, that it was instituted to hallow, to harmonise, to unite, not to impede and divide the elements of life given by God to man, that your mission is to bless and not to curse Remember that Christ Himself announced the New Age, in which the spirit would come and reveal to us in ture truth what He could only signify to us in Parables 1, and that, according to St Paul, we are destined here below, not to organise a stationary City, but to seek and to attain to the holy City of progress and of the future 1

And to the patriots we say. Remember that our doctrine is the doctrine of liberty and association, that we fight for all, that our office is to unite and not to divide, that it is our duty to attack intolerance in whatever place and form it shows itself, and not to substitute a new intolerance for the old one. Remember that it is not given to you to found your authority, save upon a general, immutable, eternal principle, that this principle is the Law of Progress , that every law has its legislator , and that if you forget this you wander in the void, you lose your rallying point, and leave your doctrines and their triumph to chance. Remember that religion is a want, a necessity of the People, that all changes of form that have been in the world have never succeeded in extinguishing the religious sentiment; and that if you neglect this element of human nature, you condemn vourself to a task that cannot be completed because it has no organic vitality, you divide man and the world into two parts, you rob your labour of a fruitful source of activity, you deny that moral unity which is the end and aim of every great revolution, and the necessary condition of its permanency And remember that every social revolution is essentially religious that every Age has its beliefs that without unity of faith Association is impossible, that to preach Humanity, Fatherland, the People-those great formulas of Association which dominate our Age from on high-while you deny or neglect the religious sentement, is to inisconceive the significance of those words, to will the end without the means, the work without the necessary instruments means, the work without the necessary instruments. These are our beliefs, and they give our rule of action. We ask those who have been educated in the habit of mixtust, which is only too certainly the fruit of party passion, and who might doubt a single instant our full and entire good faith, to watch caefully our acts and words, and where they find us in one single instance in

that day forth we will be silent We patriots, we men of a new Age, whose souls look for a religious future for all Humanity, we are bound to lift its banner boldly on high We cherish in our hearts the vision of a faith-not of a school-of progress and successive improvement for the Peoples, and in particular for our Country, which the Peoples will salute and acknowledge as the land which has kept in trust for them the germ of republicanism, we cherish the vision of a thorough and sincere agreement among all who believe in Country and Humanity, the vision of a union of all societies in one great association, strong by its activity, by its devotion, by its conscious rectitude and one sacred belief for all societies that to day have no flag, no principles, and therefore die of stagnation almost before they are born, and never fulfil then national mission, the vision of a periodical Press animated by brotherly sympathies, pressing to the same battles under the same flag, intent to achieve its task without bitterness, and spite, and jealousy, intent to gather to itself the great Voice of the Nation, intent to fulfil one and the same mission, because it is convinced that national progress advances more rapidly when a People realises and incarnates one single principle, than when it wages a losing fight for a thousand petty details that even in the mass would give no result, precisely because they do not centre round one great constructive principle, set as the keystone of the nation's structure We cherish the hope that patriots will arise, with deep convictions and vast ideas, spurred onwards, not by threats of austocratic restorations, nor rumours of foreign wars, but because it is a duty to advance along the road which our country's welfare marks out, because it is the office of a viituous man to contribute to the happiness of his fellows and the perfecting of the nation's institutions, and because the man who has a fasth is bound to witness to it every hour of the day We look forward to a generation of Swiss who will feel that they are free by their fathers' heritage and by their own right, who will hold their heads high alike before enemies and friends, who with a free and fearless soul will dow what their own well-being demands and conscience bids, who will not bow their national pride before any man, who will put their trust only in God, and in their own powers, and in the might of the fraternity of nations—a true fraternity, not of vain words,—an unresting activity—a republican morality,—a sincere faith, free from hypocrisy, and intolerance, and prejudice.

And why should we exclude Christ's priests from this movement of general consectation that we have foreseen, in which, by writtee of its own intrinsic nature and its goal, all classes, all orders, all sections of religious belief, all men of good faith, will be gathered together? Orrather, why should not the priest of Christ take his place there of right because of his faith? And why should not his blessing descend on the banner of the new crusade, on the ardent souls of the young, in whom hes the future of

We know that many will remain cold and impassible to these words, these hopes, the enthusiasm that dictates this language The reactionary patriots will smile with an air of scorn, men whose hearts are perverted or sealed by materialistic philosophy, will shrug their shoulders. Let them go their ways, But we know, too, that among those priests of Christ who stand aloof because of false opinions concerning us, among men whose hearts are sound, but who are mere tools and counters in the hands of an immoral Power for ever incapable of inspiring a faith that it has lost, there will perchance be found some few who, when they hear these words that come from our conscience and our heart, will be moved to reflect upon the part they are made to play, and the true import of the resultical schemes in which they have tried to entangle them, to feel that faith, true faith, is elsewhere; that where the spirit of God is, there is liberty 1, and that we, the friends of liberty, are men who are true to God

And we are comforted by the thought, that among

our readers, in some corner of our Switzerland, in the recesses of our mountains, or maybe on some shore of our blue and tranquil lakes, will be found perchance the white and virgin soil of some virtuous youth that will draw its inspiration from our faith, some mother who loves in all boliness, and who will receive our words, and gently whisper them in the rolliders's ears

And this is enough to recompense our labours.

The Programme of the "Roma del Popolo"1 (1871)

THE first number of our publication appears on the muth of February. It bears in front the title, La ROMA DEL POPOLO, at foot, the names of men who, whatever may be their intellectual worth, have never, despite delusions and baits of worldly success, despite suffering, exile, imprisonment, denied the ideal of their hearts It should not, therefore, be necessary to lay a programme before our readers Everybody knows who we are Our programme, the Republican Unity of Italy, dates back more than a third of a century. We have been silent concerning it at times when the people had strayed in opposite directions, and it needed expenience and disillusion to confirm its truth, we have never abdicated it And to-day, more than ever convinced by the experience of the last ten years, we raise again in Rome the flag we planted there forty years ago Our publication is the cry of the Italian conscience, to uphold that formula of the national life which historical tradition and the instincts of our people have pointed out, to condemn all that spirit of conventionality or falsehood that betrays it with a kiss, or deliberately denies it.

The mnth of February recalls a pernod, short but splendd in glory and promse, when, in the face of a policy of egotism and fear that obtained through Europe, and while the monarchy was betraying the honour and future of Italy on the fields of Lombardy, at Milan and Novarf. Rome lifed her head in solemn protest from the grave, and sealed her protest with the blood of her noblest sons! when she showed by the concord of her citizens of every order, what time she drove the papacy to dishonoured flight, and met four hostile nations in manly fight, how much virtue of love and endurance the ancient republican faith could one day rouse in Italian A long probation in the school of political sessutism, and servile patience, has worked since then to extraoush the memory of those days in shameful oblivion. But in Rome great memories have ever been the germs of new life, and if Romans have not changed their nature. the memories of 1840 will flower again more quickly and more effectively than some imagine. Do you not see how the monarchy, that was impelled to Rome by our agitation, by talk of the Republic at Paris, how it shiank timidly in apprehension from the need of planting itself there permanently, how it strove for a delay of months, as if it trembled at these memories, and the shades of the generous souls that left them to your city as a sacred lemacy to be fulfilled?

The title that we have chosen betokens the mission of Rome in the world, and the historical evolution that calls upon her to spread for the third time among the nations a gospel of civilisation, a gospel of that moral unity which has vanished for the present in the slow death-agony of the ancient faith. "This Unity all pray for "-I wrote as long ago as 1844-"can come. Italians, whatever men may do, from your country alone, and you can only write it on the flag, which is destined to shine on high above those two milhary columns, that mark the course of thirty centuries and more in the world's life-the Capitol and the Vatican ROME OF THE CASARS gave the Unity of civilisation that force imposed on Europe Rome or THE POPES gave a Unity of civilisation that Authority imposed on a great part of the human race Rome or THE PEOPLE will give, when you Italians are nobler than you are now, a Unity of civilisation accepted by the free consent of the nations for Humanity." And this faith. that sustained our life through bitterest trials, is still ours. The materialists who misgovern us see in Rome no more than a fraction of Italian earth, peopled by a certain number of inhabitants capable of paying taxes and furnishing armed levies we look on Rome as the sanctuary of the Nation, the Sacred City of Italy, the Historic Centre, whence by providential mission came Italy's message to Men, the message that makes for unity, and our initiative in the world. A few months ago they doubted the necessity of having Rome as a metropolis, and published in their newspapers the foolish and wicked phrase, that Rome belonged to the Romans, 'To us. Rome did, and does belong, to Italy, as Italy to Country and metropolis form, like human organism and brain, a whole, an indivisible unity From Rome must come, must permeate Humanity, that message that the common thought of all Italy has shaped the message that two earlier worlds have baptized and consecrated Without a common faith, without conception of an ideal that shall bind the nations together, and show to each its special function for the common good. without unity of standard for its whole moral, political, economic life, the world to-day is at the mercy of caprice, of dynastic and popular ambition and egotism. The institutive, which France has lost since 1815 lives no longer, visible and accepted, in any people England deliberately abdicated it when she introduced, under the name of non-intervention, a policy of local interests Germany threatens to sterrlise all her vast power of thought, by surrendering the action that should be collective, and the formation of her unity, to a military monarchy hostile to liberty The Slav populations, who have so great a part in the future reserved for them, dismembered and without centre of national life, still hesitate between the rule of a Czar fatal to them all. and the old difficulty of local antagonisms And, faced by such a void, we-who are ready to hail and applaud the initiative wherever it may arise-we cherish as the ideal of our heart the sacred hope that it may arise on the ruins of the Papacy and of every similar he, from the third Rome, from the Rome of the People Reborn at the cradle of an Age, Italy and Rome are called to mangurate it, if only they know their destinies, and the moral force they have behind them

But all great questions resolve themselves into a question of method, the question, how can they pass from the sphere of idas into the sphere of facts? Can we hope to conquer, and timnslate into action, the two-fold and I have spoken of, with the institutions by which we are governed? I si the instrument that we can use to-day equal to our purpose.

we answer No! We will not spin again the long and painful story whose pages are marked with the names of Villafranca, Nice. Venice begged as an alms from the foreigner. Aspromonte, Mentona, Custoza, Lissa. Fatal and pregnant with inevitable consequences as these pages are. Prussia teaches us how even a monarchy might, if it so willed, escape them and fight alone, and, trusting to the national energy, win its own battles. We will not mention, in condemnation of the monarchy, the financial ruin passed on from ministry to ministry, aggravated by an economy of petty expedients, met meffectively by immoral taxes that are a source of inequality and misery to the present generation, or by onerous loans that alienate and dry up future sources of wealth Sully, Colbert, Turgot, and others honest and capable as they, were the ministers of monarchies, and, though men like them were few and far between, and they were nearly all made powerless for good by a crowd of courtiers that always dog the throne, they nevertheless afford us glimpses of a possible selection of men better than the feeble blunderers of to-day We will not found a theoretical attack on the habits of corruption now prevalent in high places, on the subjection of the law to the perennial caprice of individual administrators, on the continual violation of the liberty of the Press and the right of Association, on the absolute contempt for public opinion, on the hundred infringements of its duty by every Department, which are brought to light month by month and reported by every organ of the independent daily press Some might point to us, as a distant hone, the example of the English monarchy, tolerant of every liberty, abhoirent of absolute rule, and following, though at a distance and imperfectly, the movement of public opinion. And though the conditions of life in England are, as we shall point out in this and subsequent numbers, radically different from our own, though it may seem strange and indecorous, that a people who have a better path before them, should be content with the vain hope that its rulers may, some day, choose this one example out of all others to follow, still, we will respect even that one example, and be silent concerning crimes and vices that others might think are confined to a single period Our attack on the ruling form of government has a higher source

When a people has in the course of centuries defined its own mission, and revealed, conquered, incarnated in itself the principle that forms the essence of its life, if it is ruled by the form of government that has presided over the long historical development of this principle, then that people has a vista of reforms before it, which multiply the practical applications of this vital principle, or slowly eliminate the defects inseparable from every system of social polity. Such form of government can. on condition that it preserve intact liberty of thought and of the individual, continue to direct, if only in appearance, that slow movement of secondary manifestations But when the necessity of things, and of the times, demands the manifestation of a new principle, when it is a question of defining a new mission, which, with its new or regenerated people devotes itself to the European task, when everything points to the revelation of a new conception of national or international life, then there mevitably begins a period of revolution Reforms inspired by theories of the past become dangerous. The form of government that ruled and represented, well or doomed system, is incapable to direct the sudden, spontaneous movement, and becomes an obstacle to the attainment of the ideal. No form of government has represented, or can represent in the world, two different principles. New things, new forms of Government, new forms of government, new men principles. New things, new forms of Government. The Europe of to-day is, on the whole, we believe, in this second stage, seeking, like the Israelites in the desert, a promised land still unknown,-seeking a new principle, a new order of things, since the old one is exhausted He who watches Europe under the light of the great historical tradition, at once recurs to the memory of those times that eighteen centuries ago announced the slow breaking-up of Paganism, and the inevitable rise of Christianity. The absence of an initiating of any general and harmonious civilisation in the world, the moral anarchy that is its consequencethe wars promoted by the interests of dynasties or some few individuals-the neutrality founded on the indifference of egotism-the treaties of peace based on foolish theories of an equilibrium which is impossible so long as it takes into count material facts only-the question of nationality, which to-day is dominant over all others, and, as eighteen centuries ago, points to a new European birth-the emancipation of the working classes which has become, as in those times was the emancipation of the slave, the universal subject of a powerful agitation-the awakening of the Slav races, as in those days of the Teutonic races, to a life that now is assured them -the materialism-the exaggerated rejection of old beliefs-the aspirations after new beliefs dawning everywhere-the insensate attempts at an impossible reconciliation between the old and the new-everything points to the near advent of an order of things. founded on principles radically different from those that preceded the development of the present Age that now is visibly exhausted. A new conception of Lafe, and of the divine Law that governs it, throbs in every manifestation of the two faculties of thought and action, that make up the unity of human nature. Monarchy can neither strangle it nor make it its handmaid.

Monarchy had its day and mission, It came to fight and destroy feedadam, which was a system of territorial dismemberment, that hindered all possibility of unity in countries destined to form nations. Fronted by a principle of privilege based on mere force and conquest, the hing, himself head of the fendal anstorcay, came to wear out and suppress its power, in the name of another principle of privilege, analogous to the first, but founded on of privilege, analogous to the first, but founded in the price of a living faith. This mission is the pair faction of Monarchy in history.

To-day, the fendal organisation has disappeared for ever, and with the function that gave life to the monarchical idea. A new conception, based on the Dovine Law of PROGRESS, takes the place of the conception that was based on the doctmes of the Fall and the Administration of the Fall and the Fall a

The world is seeking, not the material solidarity which is now assured, and which is only the outward form of the nations, but the vivifying spirit that shall guide their life towards its end, the moral unity that can only be based on the association of men and nations equal and free Monarchy, based upon the doctrine of inequality, on the privilege of an individual or of a family, can never give that unity. I The flag that leads towards that destined future means PROGRESS, and dynastic interests means stagnation. Now that its end is reached and its doctrine rejected, the monarchy, like the Papacy, lacks some foundation and potency of life Throughout Europe monarchy either follows or resists the impulse that comes from elsewhere nowhere it initiates or leads Constitutional compromise, concessions that contain within themselves their own condemnation, attempt an impossible equilibrium between two powers de facto, that lean on the past, and a third power de jure, that moves with irresistible and swifter step towards its future. This can only end in the rejection of progress, and the necessity of violent and periodical revolutions

We shall often have to speak of this condition of things in Europe But if we look at Italy, our position becomes clearer, and is much strengthened by the history of the past and present

Monarchy has no traditions in Italy It has never been a source of national life. The captains who, strong by means of corruption and mercenary pretorian troops, degraded ancient Roman Italy from the glories and titanic energy of the Republic to the Empire, only hastened the work of dissolution that had already set in, extinguished all power of conception and will, and opened the way to the invaders of the North In the second life of Italy and Rome, Monarchy had no mission, not even that which we mentioned as fulfilled by it in every other country Feudalism was destroyed by our republican Communes When, after a long period that gave the world a new civilisation, our slow deathagony began, under the solvent agency of the Papacy, amidst the materialism that swept over us, the civil wars, and the abuse of riches and power, then principalities arose under the auspices of successful condottiers, men whom the factious imprudently took as their leaders, or the nephews or bastards of ambitious Popes; all of them supported by the foreigner, who wished to divide us that he might tyrannise over us, all vassals of France, or Austria, or Spain, sometimes servants of all three in turn The sad pages of the history of our princes have no virtue or greatness to recall

They naturally sought aggrandisement at the expense of their neighbouring rivals, more by intrigue or matrimonial and mercenary alliances than by open war one was thrilled by a great Italian ideal, a vast ambition of a Nation founded by its own strength. Monarchy neither did, nor attempted, anything for the Unity or Liberty of the Country It lived inglorious, satisfied to exist even at the cost of dishonour, a persecutor of thought in the domain of religious and political belief, a corrupting influence in the field of Letters. When

France arose to epitomise an age, to solemnly proclaim the Right of the netaboulad, our princes at first threatened, without prowess to perform, then field. When they returned, not by their own efforts, but through the arms of others, they punished the peoples for having witnessed their flight. In Turin, Modena, Naples, Rome, every aspiration after a free Country and national unity, even when offered as a new jewel for their crown, was inexorably proscribed, stifled in blood by the bullet and the gallows. Journalists may be bought, records suppressed or kept closed to investigation, men may be cowards and forget their mission and their power, but that page of history can never be blotted out. Italy has no debt of grattude, or aught else, to nrinces. One day, three-and-twenty years ago, the dea, triumphant as ever over every persecution, rose, with potency of life and holy daring, from the grave where the princes thought to have buried it for ever people of Italy, in their own name, and without the intervention of regular troops, won battles of giants They might, they should have gathered for themselves the fruits of their own victories, but, intoxicated by their independence of the foreigner, and only half-awake to the consciousness of liberty, they brought them to the feet of the Monarchy Then was the time, had the Monarchy possessed a single spark of Genius or Love, to transform itself, receive the nation's baptism, and initiate itself to destinies till then ignored or The Monarchy did not rise to the occa-It entered the lists, late, hesitating, reluctant It was, by its own confession, decided solely by the fear of republican movements. It could not fight, it would not conquer, it feared the deluded and applauding people more than the enemy, and embraced the opportunity of the first reverse to descend to dishonourable treaties and withdraw from the war. Then Venice and Rome alone, unable to do more, saved, under the republican flag, the honour of the nation and its hopes for the future

Ten years later, when passions again were hot, and destines were ripe, the only statesman of the Italian Monarchy, a man without creative genius, but endowed with the ability to use others' talents, saw that it was necessary to advance or perish. He drove the monarchy along paths it loved not, lest others should seize upon them And, nevertheless, even he was unable to overcome the fatal destiny of the monarchical idea he served. Unwilling to avail himself of the popular forces of Italy, and anxious to secure an ally against them in the future, he cringed, and bought with shameful compacts an alliance with the despot who had slaughtered Rome at the feet of the Pope He condemned the national flag to be subject to the beck and call, the errors, the crooked schemings of Imperial France, Though Garibaldi proved soon afterwards that he could win unaided what our ally had so suddenly abandoned. the Monarchy accepted as the ally's gracious gift, those fields of Lombardy that our people and our army had dyed with their own blood, and then stopped halfway to move no farther unless constrained Men, who to serve the royalist party look at the consequences, not the causes of facts, may say to-day what they please, but History and the Italian conscience will one day say that the popular element desired unity when the Monarchy was dreaming of royalist alliances with Bourbon, Pope, and Austria,-that the scheme, which the royalist intriguers favoured, of a Buonapartist kingdom in the centre of Italy was defeated by the efforts of us all, by the popular plebiscites,-that the emancipation of the South of Italy was won by volunteers and the populace,-that the invasion of the provinces subject to the Pope was an inevitable necessity created by the preparations for our powerful expeditions from Tuscany and Genoa, and by the clear intentions of Garibaldi.that Venetia was another gift .- that, but for the terror excited by the bands of Calabria and of the Centre, by the risings at Piacenza and Pavia, by the movements which were feared at other places, and by the sudden mauguration of the Republic at Paris, the Monarchy would not be in Rome to-day No, we repeat, Italy has no debt of gratitude, or aught else, to princes.

A Government—and it is singular that we who are christened uloparus must remund the "practical" men of this—is not an organisation that is invented or established a prienr, copied from England or some other country, and arbitrarily thrust upon a nation without relation to its inditions, its inherent tendencies, its common beliefs—in a word, its officence conscience. A Government, to be legitimate and effective, must grow out of the whole of these conditions, as a branch, or rather as the fruit, grows from a tree.

The form of government must, if it is not to be injurious or useless, represent the sum-total of the integral elements of the country, must represent the thought that is its soul, the consciousness of the ideal to which the millions of men who are grouped within its natural boundaries strive instinctively The function of government is to purify that thought from every foreign element, to show the method best calculated to reach the ideal, and initiate the progressive stages that lead to it On these conditions—but on these conditions only—we are the friends of government, and part from the theories of reaction and systematic mistrust, that, at the present day, dominate a great part of our camp Those theories are the natural fruit of the wretched Governments that nearly everywhere rest on caste, or family interests in opposition to the interests of the people, they are legitimate arms of defence against recurring dangers. But, if they became a doctrine applicable to every set of circumstances in the future, they would falsify every conception of government, and the antagonism they would create between government and governed would be a source of never-ending war, destructive of all progress.

In the ideal that Europe is seeking, and will realise, the Government will be the mind of a Nation, the people its arm, and the educated and free individual its prophet of future progress. The first will point out the path that leads to the ideal which at present is the only thing that makes a Nation. The second will direct the forces of the country towards it. The third will protest in the name of a new and further ideal, against intolerance, and every tendency to deny the possibility of unlimited progress ¹

Meanwhile the Monarchy, a stranger to the National ulea, without historical antecedents, without roots connected with the tree of Italian life, necessarily misconceives the meaning of events and the needs of the time In a new event of European importance that is destined to initiate an Age, it saw nothing more than a question of dynasty, the sequel of a small continuous movement of aggregation to the territory of a royal house \ It annexed. like new links to an old chain, the peoples who rose and embraced in the prophetic heart-beats of a third life, and repeated, "the moment has arrived to become a Nation," This Nation, which brings to Humanity a potential force of incalculable strength, whose every fraction has written a luminous page in the history of the world, this living Being, the product of thirty centuries of labour, it would not even allow to question its own mind concerning the law of its own life. It was imprisoned, so to speak, in the royal interpretation of a form of government which represented the bygone life of a small population, 2 Italian true, and dear to us, but parted from us while it had that form. And we are now the only people who have risen to a unity of collective existence without a NATIONAL CONTRACT, which the best of the nation have deliberated on, and the consent of the majority has made authoritative

In an event which shows that the political doctrine of Nationality, and a new European birth are the meaning of the universal agitation, it merely sees the addition of a new member to old Europe, to the old Diplomacy, to the doctrines of ancient treaties. It allied Italy with despotic Governments, with all the compromises that try to main-tan the impossible status quo. In the dualism between us and the Papacy, from which, with the latter's fall, our religious mission in the world was to be imitated, it only saw the means of acquiring a patch of territory, and narrowed the solution of an immense and fateful problem, to a bastard compromise between soul and body, between the moral and Falsehood To develop and direct the Italian conception of Unity, it chose, and chooses, men who never believed in it, the advocates of federalism, the men who at one time persecuted its anostles.

The sense that they have no bond of intelligence and love with the Nation, forces the Government to dread popular progress, and adopt a policy of resistance. Its rule is, never to give way to public opinion, except when it threatens to break out irresistibly in open conflict.

This is the fundamental basis of our attack. The rest, the perversion of the army from its primitive and only mission, the safeguarding of the national soil and honour, to become an instrument of repression within the country, the creation of an army of useless officials, to acquire an undue influence in the provinces, the repudation of local liberties, the absence of an international policy, the ruin of the finances, a system of unjust and excessive transition, are only a series of consequences which logically derive from that first irrevocable set of circumstagnets.

Those who deny this in the face of History and the most recent events, delude themselves. Those who, in the Chamber or outside, attempt to guide Italy to its useful without first removing this source of all our difficulties, deceive themselves and the country. They are laying up for themselves—and we deplore it—discredit and isolation. They are laying up for the country yet more prolonged and violent crises, the more violent the more litaly stands in an exceptional position,—the position of a Nation in process of formation, for which, like a child, any deviation from the standard that educates to high and noble things may have a peculiarly and terribly fatal result

overnment either leads to good or corrupts A form of government that is based on lies, or that has no life. and therefore cannot infuse it, condemns the countrywhether consciously or unconsciously is immaterial-to career of errors and crimes, or else by breaking up the noral unity of the Nation, and condemning it to a war of its own members that fetters its movements, ends by naking it sceptical and egotistic, and drugging it to leep And sleep for a people of ancient growth, strong in he education of the centuries, and recognised by the other eoples as having largely fulfilled its mission, for such a secole sleep is more or less dishonourable, but not leadly But sleep, or long delay, is at once dishonourble and deadly to a people like ours, that is rising to secome a Nation, and must therefore of necessity grow. nd vet cannot without a power to direct its forces to one and, a people that is pondering the road it has to follow. he road which will determine the acceptance or refusal of brotherhood with other Nations

To one who sees in a Nation something more than an ggregation of individuals born to produce and consume orn, the foundations of its life are, fraternity of faith, onsciousness of a common ideal, and the association of Il faculties to work in harmony and with success towards hat ideal You cannot make it believe that life and rowth are possible in a never-ending dualism between ts government and itself } that the temple of its worship an have privilege written on its summit and equality on ts base, or that it can live, a useless member of the suropean family, abdicating every duty, every office, very mission for the good of others, concentrating all its ctivity on the petty interests of the individuals that ompose it, without debasing its moral sense, its intellience, the exercise of its faculties, or compassing its own estruction in loss of confidence, and apathy, and doubt and we see the symptoms of this growing only too fast "he Italy of to-day is no longer the Italy of 1860 The passes, cheated of the vast hopes they entertained at one me of the benefits of Unity, are fast losing the national olitical sense, and lending an eager ear to the fatal whisperings of a federalist school that was dumb ten years agor The middle class is becoming-as its abstention from the elections proves-more and more indifferent to the exercise of its political rights. The Chamber, part of it blindly subservient to government influence, part of it tied by the narrow formula which the Deputies swear, though they know it to be false and hurtful, has parted with its initiative, and is every day losing the importance that should belong to it A feeling of torpor, the feeling of a man who sees no remedy for recurring dangers. infects men's minds with scepticism, and entices them from the public arena to the exclusive care of their own private concerns What between the examples given in high places, and the logical consequences of the spread of materialism, which is partly the result of the Government's false tactics towards a dying religion morality is losing its hold on the public mind. This is how Nations die, not how they are born.

It is high time to leave a policy of expedients, of opportunism, of entanglements and crooked ways, of parliamentary hypocrisy, concealment, and compromise, that characterises the languid life of worn-out nations, and return to the virgin, loyal, simple, logical policy that derives directly from a moral standard, that is the consequence of a ruling principle that has always inaugurated the young life of peoples that are called to high destinies-

The first condition of this life is the solemn declaration, made with the unanimous and free consent of our greatest in wisdom and virtue, that Italy, feeling the times to be ripe, rises with one spontaneous impulse, in the name of the Duty and Right inherent in a people, to constitute useff a Nation of free and equal brothers, and demand that rank which by right belongs to it among the Nations that are already formed. The next condition the Nations that are already formed. The next condition political principles in which the Italian people believes at the present day, of the common ideal to which it is struing, of the special mission that distinguishes it from other peoples and to which it intends to consecrate itself for its own benefit and for the benefit of Humanity. And the final condition is to determine the methods to be employed, and the men to whom the country should delegate the function of developing the national conception of life, and the application of its practical consenuences to the manifold branches of social activity

Without this, a country may exist, stumbling along from insurrection to insurrection, from revolution to revolution, but there cannot exist a NATION.

And these three conditions can only be fulfilled by a NATIONAL CONTRACT, dictated in Rome by a constituent assembly elected by direct or indirect 1 suffrage, and by all the citzens that Iday contains

The National Contract is the inauguration, the haptism of the nation. It is the initiative that determines the normal life, the successive and peaceful development of the forces and faculties of the country Without that initiative, which gives life to the exercise of the vote. and directs it to the common ideal under the guidance of a principle and a moral doctrine, even popular suffrage is at the mercy of arbitrary influence, or the passions of the day, or the false suggestions of ambitious agitators Plebiscites taken under circumstances like these, the perverted and unenlightened expression of mere brute numbers, have, within the space of a few years, led, and will lead again, to a republic, a limited monarchy, and the despotism of a Bonaparte Until a people is educated to uniformity and brotherhood, the initiative determines in every place and time the character of the solemn acts to which the masses are called to which the masses are claimed to the control government that we believe to be the logical deduction from the punciples we believe to be the logical deduction from the punciples we be the control to t

escape an indefinite series of more or less faild crises, and fulfil her destinies, giesal, prosperous, educated to vintue. Quite recently it was said to us by partisans of the government. "Write and discuss with us. Every way of public propagands is open to you. Why is that not enough? We have a right to combat conspirances and attempts at insurrection, but we will all respect the peaceful and philosophical everyression of videas." We reply once agoin to the invitation, and write. We have often attempted it, but the Government did not keep faith with its interpreters, and answered our statements, even when they only repeated the pages of History, by sequestrating our property, and prosecuting us, without any one profession against the action.

Nevertheless, we make another attempt, if only to see whether the Government can ever learn wisdom, or if the men who gave this invitation will join us to protect liberty of thought. Our publication is frankly Republican, but it will not call to arms, or teach the neonle to rise.

When Italians are once convinced they will act for themselves. We, who are ever ready to follow them by any means, or any paths that may lead, without crime, to the steal, will use the present to meet the errors and prejudices which are constantly turning many minds from the idea that is the basis of our mission. When we undertake to discuss in theory the present and future condition of Italy, Italians will be able to gauge from the attitude of the Government towards to the the control of the constitutions and moral

And we will, above all, meet the errors that proceed from our own camp, and degrade, and warp, or lessen the purity of our Ideal Many of the accusations that come from the opposite camp do not ment any lengthy retitation. Those who even now speak of anarchy and feebleness as inseparable from republican institutions, we can meet with the miracles of progress and power recently performed by the United States, and the steady peace which regins by the sade of liberty in the valleys of Switzerland Those who are not ashamed to cast in our teeth their childish suspicions of popular tyranny, or terrorism, or spoliation, we can answer with the names of Venice and Rome, and all that we have done or written during the last forty years. But the materialism that shatters the unity of human nature, and while it supplies us with an object suppresses all the noble impulses, all the sacred beliefs that stimulate us to fulfil it. - the false philosophies that lead, consciously or unconsciously, to the worship of accomplished facts, and success, and Force,-the schools of politics and of economics that select a single instance from among the manifold integral terms of the social problem, and deduce from it the solution of all secondary problems.-the blind, servile copying of the old French Revolution, still rooted only too deeply in most of our hearts, that fetters us with theoretical formulas of individual rights which are but the summary expression of a dead age which we have abandoned for the instiative of the future age,-the excessive tendency to mete out the same blame, the same suspicion, so often unjust, to many who, like us, love the Fatherland, but are intellectually at fault as to method, that we mete to the few selfish schemers who, through thirst of lucre and power, consciously defile and betray the National Italian Revolution .- the narrow-mindedness that anathematises a grand and fruitful past out of hatred to a poor and feeble present, that falsifies History, that tries to deprive us of our glories, and denies the tradition which is the very life of Humanity,-all these deserve, and we will give them, an attentive and thorough examination. It is these and other errors brought to our Democracy from foreign schools of thought that have made the Italian intellect stray from the right path ,

It is time to call it back from barren criticism to the National School, with its constructive methods, its tendencies to correlate and harmonise, from a materialism that presumes to understand, explain, determine motion while it destroys the motive power, to the old everpresent doctine of the Spirit that harmonises motion and motor As far as our powers permit we will try to accomplish this

Only on this condition can our National Revolution be achieved Blind revolts lead only to victories of a day. Simple negations can overthrow an old worm-out edifice; they never lay the foundations of a new one, they never win a people to organised and effective action.

or build the Temple of the Nations

Our party is faithful to the ideal of our country's Traditions, but ready to harmonise them with the Traditions of Humanity and the inspirations of conscience, it is tolerant and moral, and it must therefore now confute, without attacking or misconstruing motives We need not fear that we are forging weapons for the enemy, if we declare the religions of the world to be successive expressions of a series of ages that have educated the human race, if we recognise the religious faculty as eternal in the human soul, eternal, too, the bond between heaven and earth We can admire in Gregory VII, the gigantic energy of will, the sublime moral effort that could not be realised with the instrument that Christianity could lend, and, at the same time, in the name of the progress we have made, declare the Papacy to be for ever dead We can recognise the Mission which Aristocracy and Monarchy had for other peoples in the past, and vet proclaim, for all of us, the duty and the right to outstrip those worn-out forms We may, without denying the reverence due to Authorityfor that is the real object of all our efforts-claim the task of attacking every Authority that is not based on two conditions-the free and enlightened consent of the governed, and the power of directing the national life and making it fruitful

We believe in God In a providential Law given by Him to life

In a Law, not of the Atonement, not of the Ratt, and Redemption by the grace of past or present mediators between God and man, but of Progress, unlimited Progress, founded on, and measured by, our works.

In the Unity of Life, misunderstood, as we believe. by the Philosophy of the last two centuries

In the Unity of the Law through both the manifestations of Life, collective and individual

In the immortality of the Ego, which is nothing but the application of the Law of Progress, revealed beyand doubt now and for ever by Historical Tradition. by Science, by the aspirations of the soul to the Life that is manifested in the individual

In Liberty, by which alone exists responsibility, the consciousness and price of progress

In the successive and increasing association of all human faculties and powers, as the sole normal means of progress, at once collective and individual In the Unity of the human race, and in the moral

alone And hence we believe in the holy, inexorable, dominating idea of Duty, the sole standard of Life Duty that embraces in each one, according to the sphere in which he moves and the means that he possesses, Family, Fatherland, Humanity Family the altar of the Fatherland, Fatherland the sanctuary of Humanity, Humanity a part of the Universe, and a temple built to God, who created the Universe, that it might draw near to Him, Duty, that bids us promote the progress of others that our own may be effected, and of ourselves that it may profit that of others, \. Duty, without which no right exists, that creates the virtue of self-sacrifice. in truth the only pure virtue, holy and mighty in power, the poblest jewel that crowns and hallows the human soul.

And finally, we believe, not in the doctrines of the present day, but in a great religious manifestation founded upon these principles, that sooner or later will arise from the initiative of a people of freemen and believers-perhaps from Rome if Rome knows her mission -and which, while it includes that chapter of Truth that former religions won, will reveal yet another chapter, and will open the road to future progress, destroying in their germ all privilege and intolerance of caste

We have wished to express our principles briefly, that all who wish to help us may know what are the conditions of fellowship on which we will gratefully accept their help and counsel From these derive all the rules that we prefix to questions of the intellect, and politics, and economics We believe that to make politics an art. and sever them from morality, as the royal statesmen and diplomatists desire, is a sin before God and destructive to the peoples. \ The end of politics is the application of the moral Law to the civil constitution of a Nation in its double activity, domestic and foreign. The end of economics is the application of the same Law to the organisation of Labour in its double aspect, production and distribution. All that makes for that end is Good and must be promoted, all that contradicts it or gives it no help must be opposed till it succumb and Government must proceed united, like thought and action in individuals, towards the accomplishment of that mission And what is true for one Nation is true as between Nations. Nations are the individuals of Humanity The internal national organisation is the instrument with which the Nation accomplishes its mission in the world. Nationalities are sacred, and providentially constituted to represent, within Humanity, the division or distribution of labour for the advantage of the peoples, as the division and distribution of labour within the limits of the state i should be organised for the greatest benefit of all the citizens \ If they do not look to that end they are useless and fall If they persist in evil, which is egotism, they perish nor do they rise again unless they make Atonement and return to Good

Let us staunch the two sources of our worst wounds,—the dissension between the Government and the governed, and the selfishness that dominates individuals,—we must constitute a Government that represents the mind, the tendencies, the duties of the Nation, and we must determine the National ideal, the origin and standard of our duties. The former is a problem of form to be solved, in any practical way, by the initiative of the whole country, the latter must be sold by the delegates of the nation, who shall make a NATIONAL CONTRACT, and found a system of national and compulsory Public Education, which the Contract shall determine

For both, the preliminary and essential question is to recognise and proclaim where the Sovereignty resides.

Two Schools, both foreign, both founded on that dismemberment of the unity of human nature to which we have drawn attention, now hold the field, and solve in their several ways the philosophico-religious, political, and economic questions that are exciting interest in Europe - The first places sovereignty in the andividual, in the Ego. With no conception of Law, and hence none of collective duty, it finds, wherever it turns, a partial, temporary expression of life, the doctrine of Rights supreme, inviolable, it bases all organisation on this latter doctrine. The spontaneous action of the individual, whether it leads to a power that is only de facto, or whether it instinctively reaches a standard of justice and truth, always bears, in its eyes, the mark of a Sovereignty According to the disciples of this school, self-interest, or if that be insufficient, the action of the preponderant force, is sufficient to prevent the inevitable conflicts among all these petty local sovereignties from degenerating into civil war. This School leads, in Religion, to protestantism with the more timid, who stop halfway, to materialism with those whose logic is more thorough In politics it leads to federalism, to the almost absolute independence of local interests, to absolute liberty of education, to systematic distrust of all governmental control, and in international life to nonintervention In economics it leads to unlimited competition, to the recognition of every acquired right without considering whether it is fatal to the progress of the majority, to the unrestricted doctrine of lasser faire. It accepts liberty alone among human faculties as the basis of civil society The State is regarded as merely an aggregation of individuals, without any common udual except the satisfaction of personal interests, the Nation as an aggregation of Communes, all sovereign and arbities of their own development, and Government as a necessary evil, to be limited as much as possible, and confined to the exercise of a coercive force in cases of mutual robbert or slaunther

The other School is opposed to the first on every point. It places sovereignty exclusively in the collective will, in the "We," and inevitably concentrates it slowly in the hands of a few, if not of a single man The State is everything, the individual practically nothing. The social ideal is absolutely binding, and must be accepted by him The Nation absorbs all independent local life in a strong centralised government. The ideal that duects the Nation is supposed, theoretically, to be founded on the good, practically it is neither confirmed, nor elaborated, nor modified by the intervention of the free examination or consent of the citizens According to their system, the best are, and ought to be, called to apply it, but not by the people, they, the majority at least, have no part in the choice of the few who are already declared to be the most capable of the nation Association is predetermined and ordained, but by authority and on a uniform and fixed plan. The instruments of Labour and of Production are one by one handed over to the State The conditions of distribution are decided by authority. This school leads, in religion, to Catholicism with the timid, to Pantheism with the strong-minded In politics it leads to despotism. whether of one, or a few, or many, is immaterial In economics it leads to the search—the probably fruitless search-for a limited degree of material prosperity, at the cost of all possibility of progress or of increased production, at the cost of every stimulus to the growth of activity, the inventiveness, the initiative of the individuals Just as Liberty is everything to the former School, so is Authority to this

We reject those two Schools, which, under whatever name they appear, only continue the dualism of the doctrine which we declare dead The republican form of government, as we understand it, places the centre of movement in a higher sphere, in which the two much-abused terms, Laberty and Authority, shall not conflict, but harmonies with one another

The problem that is agitating the world is not the rejection of authority, for without authority, moral anarchy, and therefore sooner or later material anarchy, are inevitable. It is the rejection of all lifeless authority which is founded on the mere fact of its existence in the past, or on privileges of birth, riches, or aught else, and maintained without the free discussion and assent of the citizens, and closed to all progress in the future. It is not the resection of liberty, whose absence makes tyranny inevitable It is the restoration of the idea contained in that word to its true meaning-the power to choose, according to our tendencies, capacity, and circumstances, the means to be employed to reach the end It is the rejection of that liberty which is an end to itself, and which abandons society and the mission of humanity to the caprice of the impulses and passions of individuals Authority and Laberty, conceived as we state them, are equally sacred to us, and should be reconciled in every question awaiting settlement All things in Liberty and for Association. this is the republican formula Liberty and Association, Conscience and Tradition, Individual and Nation, the "I" and the "We" are inseparable elements of human nature, all of them essential to its orderly development Only in order to coordinate them and direct them to a purpose, some point of union is required which is superior to all. Hence practical necessity leads us inevitably back to the high principles that we enun-

Sovereignty exists neither in the "I" nor the "We", it exists in God, the source of Life, in the Progress that defines life: in the Moral Law that defines Duty

In other terms, Sovereignty is in the IDEAL.

We are all called to do its work.

The knowledge of the ideal is given to us—so far as it is understood by the age in which we live—by our intelligence when it is inspired by the love of Good, and proceeds from the Tradition of Humanity to question its own consaence, and reconciles these two sole criteria of Truth.

But the knowledge of the ideal needs an interpreter who may forthwith indicate the means that may best attain to it, and direct its application to the various branches of activity. And as this interpreter must embrace within itself the "I" and the "Wi". Authority and Liberty, State and Individual, and as, moreover, it must be progressive, it cannot be a man or any order of men selected by chance, or by the perceptive of a privilege unprogressive by its very nature, or birth, or riches, or atight else. Given the principles contained in the contract of fath and brotherhood, this interpreter can only be the Penole, the Nation

God and the People these are the only two terms that survive the analysis of the elements which the Schools have given as the foundation of the social communion. Rome knows by what paths of self-sacrifice, civil virtue, and glory, the banner that bore these two solemn words inscribed upon it, awakened

And here for the present we may stop The Italian

Mission is therefore -

The Unity of the Nation, in its material aspect, by the reconquest of the Trentino, of Istra and of Nice, in its moral aspect, by National Education, accompanied by the free and protected Instruction of every heterodox doctrine.

Unity of defence, or the Nation armed

Unity of the Contract and every Institution that represents the civil, political, and economic progress of all Italians

Steady activity of the legislative power, and the administration of the institutions that concern the national progress, to be entrusted, not to the executive power, but to Commissions by delegation from the legislative.

Communal liberty to be decreed so far as regards the special progress of the various localities.

Suppression of all offices intended at the present day to represent an undue influence of the Government over the different local districts

the different local districts

No XI of the "Roma del Popolo"

IN 1835, when the French republican party was impulsely powerful in its server and public organisation in men of strong intelligence, of generous daring an a curve courage full then too little known among us when an insurrection seemed imminent and success seemed probable, and the eyes of all Europe were turner with anxiety and confidence to France, I wrote in: French Reuver 1.—

"The initiative is lost in Europe, and while each of u ought to be working to recover it, we persuate the peoples that it still lives, active and potent "Since 1814 there has been a void in Europe, and instead of labouring to fillit up, we deny the fact

"From 1814 onwards, there has been no people take the initiative, and yet we persist in saying the French people has the power

- "The French Revolution must be considered, not as programme, out as a summary not as the initiative of new age, but as the last formula of an expiring age."
- "The progress of the peoples depends to-day upo their capacity to emancipate themselves from France
- "The progress of France depends upon its power t emancipate itself from the eighteenth century and the
 - "On the Revolutionary Instative," in the Revue Republicaine

The present article is a commentary on those words I write it because I see even to this day, more vivid and potent than I had believed, the mordinate prestige possessed by France and the memories of its great Revolution over the minds of our young men, a prestige that delayed our reawakening for long years, and still delays its completion or threatens to pervert its direction The events of the past thirty-six years have confirmed in unmistakable language the truth of that statement France still, as always, is self-deluded, believes herself to be the leader of European progress, and has from that time forth, almost of necessity, been moving in a circle. from monarchy to republicanism, from republicanism to despotism, and now she seems to be beginning the same revolution once again. Equally incapable of repose or normal motion, never able, whether under monarchy or republic, at home or abroad, to take one of those upward steps that open out a new horizon to Nations already organised, or point an easier way for peoples wandering in search of a life as yet denied them Nevertheless, the idea of France, mistress of the destinies of Europe and hastening to unfold them for the good of all, ploughs to-day like lightning through the soul of the young Italian generation, even as, when I faced the first battles and sorrows of life, it dominated the soul of the generation that is now dead or in lethargic old age. In each convulsive movement of France's great fall our people dream that the initiative is reborn Anythought that takes shape for few days in Paris, even when it proves the dissolution of the old power which was based upon unity and the prevailing anarchy, finds among us thoughtless and indiscriminating applause. And at every fresh disillusioning, Italian lips utter, or Italian faces show, the cowardly thought how should me attempt what France attempted and failed to do? What! are we condemned to crawl for ever behind man-king or peopleking? Is Italy doomed to be the satellite of a greater planet? Cannot its population of twenty-five millions do for the new Age what twenty-five millions of French did for the Age that is passing away?

Italy does not lack force, but the consciousness of the force that she has within herself, she lacks collective virtue, the trust of each city in its neighbour city, of each individual in his brother, the trust of all in the latent life that throbs in the tradition of a people that once was great and is fated to be great again, the life that makes a nation And among the many causes of this mistrust-catholicism, materialism, our long servitude. the contradiction between the end of our movement and the means adopted to reach it-not the least is the false conception universally prevalent of the characteristics and historic value of the Revolution in France. Tust as a new faith is only revealed when the majority agree in boldly declaring the exhaustion and extinction of the old one, just as a people surrounded by enemies only finds salvation in its own strength when it despairs of others' help, so a Nation can only move resolutely onward along the road, that leads to prosperity and greatness when it is convinced that others will not advance for it. The initiative force which it fancies is elsewhere, and which perhaps is hidden in its own breast, cannot reveal itself, for no one thinks of evoking it.

And another evil consequence results from the belief that the French Revolution has ushered in a new age. -the blind tendency to imitate its actions, copy its formulas, expend all our active strength in following out the consequences or its ruling ideas, without advancing to the discovery or the confirmation of new ones The three terms liberty, equality, fratermity, mark out the circle within which all our social philosophy revolves, it forgets that association is the mother-idea of our Age, an idea unknown to the official inspirations of the Revolution A had and immoral definition of life, the search after happiness, filched from the catechism of Volney and the French republican constitutions. rules with slight disguise the whole of our moral philosophy, and cannot help instilling the poison of Egotism into the veins of a society that nevertheless is said to believe in the Law of Common Progress. A baseless speculation, without possible sanction, except in the brute force of individual rights, which was the one formula of every Assembly that controlled the Revolution, summanses the whole of our political science. We mutter the sacred words, Dury and SELF-SACRIFICE, but leave their interpretation to the caprice of good instincts, and thus inadvertently admit all the aristocracies of nghts, won just for themselves by one or another class The theory that popular sovereignty should be exercised, not as the interpretation of a supreme moral Law which has been indicated by a declaration of principles, and diffused by a uniform National Education, but as the brutal despotism of figures, which one day leads to republican liberty, and on the morrow to the unlimited power of a usurper and tyrant,-the doctrine of the impossible divoice of Church and State, both, to-day, phantasms and lies, but which nevertheless are destined sooner or later to represent the harmony between principle and their application,-the debased conceptions of authority, with which Democracy wages war solely because the authority of to-day is a lifeless corpse, though in the ultimate analysis authority is the end and aim of all our efforts .the insane admiration for a period of terrorism which some have taken for energy, but which was only fear and which prepared France for the Empire, and even now makes a number of unthinking enemies of Republican Institutions,-these and other fatal errors all derive from that initial error that makes us forget our own tradition and its message, and fetters us to the tradition that the French Revolution was the beginning of the present age, whilst we are all, consciously or unconsciously, apostles and heralds of an Age that is about to dawn. In the meantime, the few bad men who are opposed to us, and the many credulous men who accept their charges without examination, take advantage of that error to prophesy from the Republic, as we understand it, the same consequences as the deeds that stain. only too deeply, the glories of the French Revolution

direction of the most important science called the philosophy of History, which we define as the terception of the great Tradition of Humanity, To-day, thanks to the avowed materialists who do not understand it, and the materialists disguised as Hegelians who misunderstand it, that perception risks being lost And National tradition, which is so large a part of that of Humanity, is forgotten. The writers and ministers of the monarchical party have converted it into a miserable machiavelism that dates precisely from the time when the princely vassals of Charles V. and Clement VII interrupted that tradition Perhaps, unperfect and weak as my work must mevitably be, it may arouse some few to revive it among the young who have warm hearts and austere genius. In any case it will not be out of place if, in the absolute lack of historical works on the French Revolution among us, at least one Italian should recall us to the need of considering that great event without either blind servility or culpable antagonism, and starting from a standpoint different from that taken by the French and other earlier writers

τ No XII of the " Roma del Popolo"

In a book nobly conceived and boldly written, my friend Edgar Ouinet asks himself in tones of grief why the political results secured by the Revolution are so much inferior to the force, the gigantic energy, expended in its course. How is it that even now we are obliged to fight for the rights that it proclaimed more than eighty years ago, obliged to fight for that Liberty for whose sake nearly two millions of men sacrificed their lives? And he answers that it is because, instead of looking the religious problem in the face, which is the basis of every Society in process of formation, instead of resolutely parting from Catholicism and attacking it as Christianity

atticked Paganism, the Revolution hesitated, uncertain, vacillating, before the problem, and timidly, hypocritically, condescended to a compromise with Catholicism All the other causes to which he refers in the course of his work are, in his very secondary and inferior.

But why did that cause exist? Why, in a generation who were very guants in steingth of will, did their daring fail them here? A Revolution is never complete, says the writer, except on condition of embracing and following a new belief, or the rejection and open severance from an old one! Why did the Revolution effect neither the one nor the other?

Ounet does not try to solve this question so indispensable to the right understanding of the mission, the value, the historical significance of the Revolution. He too, like all French writers, was tempted away by the idea that the initiative belongs to France He, in the sphere of thought, succumbed to the timidity and uncertainty for which he reproved the Revolutionists in the sphere of action He wanders in the dim domain of an urational illogical despair. He sets to the fault of individuals what belongs to the necessity of things, to the laws that govern events, at times he misunderstands the rôle of the revolutionary leaders, at times he contradicts himself2, he leaves the reader at the end of a long, and in many aspects, splendid work, in the same darkness that he undertook to dispel, still doubtful of the road to be followed in the future

The Revolution was unable, in spite of all its daring, to accomplish the impossible. The Revolution was directly descended from Christianity. The inspiration that ruled its actions never passed beyond the limits of Christian principles. Its work was to apply to mundane affairs, to political life, the fundamental ideas that Christianity had pointed to the world as belonging to the spiritual order of things, to be only verified by man in heaven

Christianity is the Religion of the indiminal The onlicative and progressive flie of Humanity, and of its component nations, is unknown to its dogmas or its moral doctrines Christianity consecrated the two aspects, internal and external, of indiminality, it knew nothing of association, which we know now to be the only method of Progress It regarded men as brothers, because they were the sons of one God, but the itedal was a personal, and not a collective one, and each individual had indicated to him the way to attain the iseal, without learning that it was needful for this very end to unite the capabilities and powers of all. To save oneself, not through the world, or by working with the world, but in spite of the world—that was the supreme formula of

Christianity

The Revolution, being a result of the Christian teaching, ould neither rebel against it nor free itself from it. The Revolution treed to mitroduce into political matters the theory, equality, fraterity for me. Its theory of rights gave the political formula of the indimidual, it did not go beyond that It did not found a new Society, it prepared the old one for liberty and equality. Liberty—even when it is given to all, and called Equality—cannel found a new Society, association alone can do that Liberty is no more than an element of social life. It provides the materials: it does not breathe into them the breath of life.

The Revolution, being the daughter of Christianity, did not cross its boundary, did not pass beyond its primitive inspiration, It might, if the Latin nations had not ingrained opposite tendencies, have adopted the protestant doctrine, and freed itself from Catholicism, but it could never escape from Christian forms ¹

In Quinet's book the question never goes beyond the terms of the acceptation or rejection of Catholicism, which is only one of the forms of Christianity, and it might be easid that for the new age he only sees the necessity of a Christian transformation. Book XIII c vi.

The Revolution, therefore—save for those presentaments of the future that permeate every great Revolution—was not the beginning but the compendium, the onclusion of an age—a practical summary of the conquests of the past, not a brigaramme of future conquests.

All the actions, the wacillation, the apparent contradictions, the conquests, the vagaries of the Revolution, and its descent to the Empire, find an easy explanation from this point of view And if I am, as I believe, right, the Christian Age is concluded, France's mission to institute is complied We have another conception of Life, and travel in search of a new earth and a new beaven. And the first People who shall arise in the name of that conception, with the faith that says, I can, and the energy that says, I suil, and cry to the other peoples, "I am fighting for you all, follow me," this People will give its name to an Ale.

Buchez stood alone in seeing in the French Revolution a product of Christianity He was the founder of a School that had glimpses of many great truths, but lost their fruits by mixing them with serious errors. He understood that the essence of the Revolution was Chustian, but believing as he did in the eternity of Christianity, and not divining its slow death-agony, believing too that the unitative had been given to France for all time, he saw in the Revolution the beginning of a new Era, in which a transformed Christianity would be converted into a social religion, and would make a reality of the Kingdom of God on earth But this is to will the impossible. A religion is never transformed, it exhausts the possibilities of life contained in the principle that created it, and then it dies, leaving that principle among the number of acquired truths A given and is never reached by an instrument designed for another purpose A faith that has for its end the salvation of the individual, for its means, the belief in a mediator between God and the individual, for its condition, Grace, for dogma, the fall and redemption through another's works-such a faith can never tound a Society which, though it works for the same end, has for means the belief in the collective life of Humanity, the sole mediator between God and the individual, for its condition, the works that we have done on the earth, for its doctrine, Progress. An attempt like that of the French Revolution, and guided by a gigantic energy of purpose, was made six centuries before What Gregory VII attempted, however superficially others may judge him. was to destroy the dualism between two powers, and the organisation of a world hving a collective life, with the instrument supplied by Christianity, not finding in Christianity sufficient virtue to reach his end, he was led is, the world is always moving in search of Authority, and has neither life nor progress save in said by it Only, all Authority, representing, as it does, a definite and limited sum of Truth, is exhausted and perishes when it has suifilled its mission, and to him who persists in upholding it in its decay, Revolutions reply that they intend to bury it and win a to try, like the Revolution, and with similar futility, a policy of violence and terrorism, imposing celibacy by decree, and inflicting death upon souls by excommunication

Other writers—the latest and most important being Michele, the author, I will not say of the best book on the Revolution in its historical aspect, but the book most mbred with a moral standard of judgment that I know of—struck by certain incidents of rebellion common to all Revolutions, and neglecting for excrescences and foreshadowings inseparable from all great national movements that which constitutes their essence and definition, saw in the French Revolution a great rejection of Christianity, and hence the deginning of a new Era Christianity, in the opinion of those writers, is the rigin abolition of privilege. And they appeal, immerower, to Voltaire and Rousseus, to the inspires of the Revolution, who were all, as they say, and r.Christian.

I will touch presently on the course of ideas and tendencies followed by Voltaire and Rousseau, and how far the Revolution waged war without truce against privilege, and inaugurated the reign of justice, will, I hope, appear from the whole of this work. But I think I must here make two observations to facilitate the development of the question.

The first is, that to estimate clearly the historical value of a Revolution, we must distinguish between the opinions of individuals and the facts of the Revolution itself Men, duming Revolutions, almost always surrender themselves to the impulses that dominate the multitudes, and compromise with their own. It matters title that Mirabeau, and perhaps many others in the Assembly, took their impaintoin from the irreligious seepirism of Voltaire, for when, with the view of overcoming hopposition of the delegy to the confuscation of ecclessistical opposition of the clergy to the confuscation of ecclessistical risk, the Carthusan Geile proposed in April 1750 that the Assembly should declare the Catholic, Apostolic, Roman religion the religion of the State, and its worship alone authorised, and when the whole of the Right of the Assembly applauded his motion, Mirabeau, pretend ing to be astonished by the doubt which it implied, asked, "whether it were necessary to decree that the sun shone," and another deputy, with equally sceptical opinions, quoted "the gates of hell shall not prevail against "Catholicism, wondering that those words should be confirmed by a poor human decree It matters little that Robespierre derived all his views from Rousseau's writings, for when, in November 1792, Cambon proposed that the State should cease paying the salaries of the clergy, Robespierre declared that every attack upon the Catholic religion was a menace to popular morality, and contested the right of the Revolution to take an initiative by stating that "it mattered little whether the religious opinions followed by the people were prejudices or not, it was necessary, in any case, to base their reasonings upon them" The character of the Revolution must, in the series of the stages of Progress, be measured by what it did, not by what the revolutionists thought.

The second point, which is almost always overlooked, is, that human effort along any stage of Progress is achieved first in the intellectual, afterwards in the practical subere

A religion begins to die in the mental sphere-that is, in its dogma and ritual-when the bractical application of its informing principle is in the first stage of its development in the field of civil and political facts. Like all great ideas, each religious synthesis begins by being elaborated in the intelligence, in the sphere of spiritual activity The consequences are not realised in the sphere of material activity until the intelligence has completely assimilated that principle and is master of it But the continuity of Progress requires, that even before the work that centres round the vital idea of the religious system of the Age is fully completed, the mind should see yet another religion dawning on the far horizon, and begin a new task of development, either around or parallel to it. In the meantime, as I said, the logical deductions of the old system are translated into facts in actual civil life

If this were not so, Progress could only move by fits and starts. The human intellect would remain stationary during the whole time that the idea is being practically applied, and practical genus, if the work of application is exhausted, would necessarily be stationary in its turn, until the new idea is fully evolved in the intellect. The periods of human progress, interrupted by these stationary periods, would, to re-connect themselves, need an impulse, some initiative, from a higher source. This is the theory of direct immediate evolutions, which we reject as false, and contrary to all we can divine of the nature of God.

The ant-Christan tendencies of some of the precursors of the Revolution do not therefore contradict my assettion. These thinkers, placed on the confines of two words, already had gimpses, not of the future religion itself, but of its necessity and the insufficiency of the old one, while, on the field of civil and political facts, the Revolution summarised and concluded the Christian Age.

Christianity, setting aside its conception of heaven and its slow ingrafting of dogma, and considering it in its historical relation with other religions, is, as I have said, the religion of the individual, and this constitutes its vital essence, its mission

In the slow and progressive development of the great formula of the Universe, the supreme word of which is UNIVITY, and which assigns to all of us for a final and the conquest of the moral Unity of Humanity, so that each one of us may one day reflect the conception of the Law given us,—in this development, Historical Tradition (when we regard it, not with the presumptious ignorance of modern materialists, but with the reverent attention due to the representation of our collective life, the sole standard from which we can deduce and verify the conception of the Law that governs it; shows us a sense of great ages, all hall-marked and defined by a religion, all intended to concentrate human activity on the evolution of one of the essential elements of the world's problem, God, Nature, the Individual, Humanity. Every age reveals, in part at least, a new term of the formula, and points to a new goal for the forces of the intellect. Every religion pours a fresh drop of the universal life into the human soul

Of the ancient religions of the East, some had conceived of God as solitary, supreme, beyond the reach of human intellect, menacing as Fate, others, as sometimes blessing, sometimes cursing Nature. All of them neglected man, none suspected the ray of the divine ideal that is in him, the bond that joins him to the Infinite. On one side was an immense, inscrutable force, on the other, an immense, unconscious, passive weakness, and, between the two. Love had not yet traced with its wings a bridge for possible union had expressed God alone, man lay crushed, a slave, the sport of an mexorable Fate, or of the caprices of

The polytheistic religions expressed man, and his spontaneous nature. They rescued him from a pantheism that oppressed him; they had glimpses of the fact that in the scheme of the universe man had a part, but they did not succeed in defining this part Ignorant of the unity of Life, and its double manifestation in man, individual and collective, conscious only of the former, they focussed the work of the intellect on the individual, and saw in him only the subjective existence of the ego-that is, hberty, But without conception of the mission of humanity, uncertain as to the end, and therefore as to the means to be pursued, the work was arrested, powerless to attain its purpose, in the face of a universal fact, -inequality, and they accepted this fact, decreeing by an infallible dogma the two natures in men. Greece and Rome nobly developed the idea of liberty, but for one class of men only Slaves existed, by the doom of birth or conquest, side by side with the citizens

The Christian Age came to complete the work begun by Polytheism, and to contemplate the individual in his other aspect, in his external, objective, relative existence.

Its principal work was therefore, to develop the idea of equality The Mosaic religion had already established the vital doema of the divine unity Christianity approprinted this dogma, and, advancing a step further, withdrew it from the privilege of the chosen people in order to diffuse it among all peoples. The God of Moses was the God of Israel, of the Nation the God of Christianity was the God of men, who were necessarily brothers in Him The slow abolition of slavery was a consequence of the triumph of Christianity, of the evangelisation of the slave by the priests. The immediate completion of emancination being impossible, except at the risk of grave dangers. so barbarised and so brutalised were the slaves, there arose under the fluidal system an intermediate stage of serfdom but the Church itself represented in this respect the ideal As the guardian of that portion of the Moial Law which the times permitted, she abolished in her own ranks the fatality of birth and the hereditary principle, and made merit alone the basis of every ecclesiastical

Beyond this Christianity neither did, nor could, proceed The prevalent conception of Life knew nothing of collective Humanity, of the Law of Progress that governs us, of the Historical Tradition that reveals it and explains its method, of the solidarity that exists between past, present, and future generations, of the unity that binds together earth and heaven, the ideal and the real, the infinite and the finite With aspirations towards the future more potent than some think, with a worship of the ideal visible in Art, as in all the other Christian manifestations of the first thirteen or fourteen centuries, Christianity, placed between an end so tremendous and remote as salvation, or in other words, perfection, and on the other hand the feeble, unequal, isolated. fruitless powers of the ego, active only for a brief period of time, Christianity was driven to two conclusions first, the impossibility of solving the problem with the conditions of this life as they were then known, and next, the necessity for the intervention of a superior power independent of all law, in order to overcome the immense disparity between the end and the means.

Hence the devinity given to Tesus, grace, the contempt of earthly things, the insufficiency of works, the ardent longing for heaven, which is the source of prayer, of isolation, of renunciation of the visible world, not of association, or the progressive transformation of the elements in which we live, or self-sacrifice to incarnate so much of the ideal as is possible here below, hence the divorce between the visible and the invisible world, between the life on earth and a kingdom of Justice and Love to be realised only in Heaven Christianity received the idea of liberty that Paganism had worked out. added the idea of equality, and preached charity to the brethren, but it was a liberty purely spiritual, an equality of souls before God; a charity to be exercised between individual and individual only, and a part of the renunciation of earthly goods rather than an attempt to suppress the causes of pain and evil Religion was not life, but a reward promised for a life to be accepted on the earth such as it was

I am speaking of Christianity, not of Catholicism, which was at first a form of Christianity, then a deviation from it Even Protestantism, which was generally supposed to be a Revolution, and which many believed a progressive movement in Christianity, was practically nothing more than a protest in favour of intellectual liberty, that had been systematically violated by the Papacy, and, in a higher sense, an evidence, little understood by the Reformers themselves, of the slow extinction of the Christian Sixteen centuries had exhausted the vigour of the Christian philosophy The human spirit was bound to move again towards another and vaster philosophy. hence the necessity for a strong assertion of the individual, and for that right of private judgment without which every attempt to pass the limits of the old belief would have failed Protestantism unconsciously asserted And that was its sole mission in the world, it did not pass beyond the boundary of the age sovereignty of the individual-arbitrarily confined within the limits of the Bible-was its last word, re-echoed in the Arts the Economics, the Politics that it inaugurated

France took on herself the task to conclude the Age of the endrudual, which was sterilised and morblund, by two more centuries of dissolution. She summarised its conquests, its principles, its characteristics, and translated them practically into the sobject of civil life.

Did she cross the boundary? Did she initiate the new Age?

Ideas rule the world and its events. A Revolution is the passage of an idea from theory to practar Whatever men have said, material interests never have caused, and never will cause, a Revolution Exteme poverty, financial ruin, oppressive or unequal taxation, the provoke risings that are more or less threatening or violent, but nothing more. Revolutions have their origin in the mind, in the very root of life, not in the body, in the material organism A Religion or a philosophy less at the base of every Revolution. This is a truth that can be proved from the whole historical tradition of Humanity

Now, what were the ruling ideas in the period immediately preceding the Revolution? What were the doctrines that howered over its cradle? What was it that inspired and baptized its development and the various parties that promoted it? Did they go beyond the confines of the Age of the individual and his right? Did they intrate the Age of Dury, and of Association, the only means of fulfilling Dury.

Three men, Volume, Education, Montesquieu, comprehended the Volume, Rouseau movement of the righteenth century, and exercised a movement of the eighteenth century, and exercised as the Revolution and indisentee on the development of the Revolution and Indisentee on the development of the Revolution Montesquieu, on the ideas of the Constitutent Assembly, Rousseau, on the men of the Convention, Voltane, on the beginnings of the movement and certain general tendencies that respipeur intermittently to recall his name, and the indefitigable war he waged for fifty years against the traditions of the Church and the captive of despotsing

Voltaire's genius was quick, subtle, acute, analytic, encyclopædic, but not profound, he was moved by good and philanthropic instincts rather than by strong and reasoned moral beliefs; a warrior rather than an apostle, a hater of evil rather than a worshipper of good , too much extolled by some, too much depreciated by others, Voltaire founded no doctrine, but, as I have said, popularised tendencies,-tendencies that existed already, and were almost innate in the French genius, but to which he gave new force and clothed in noble language,-tendencies which leak out in a number of the events of the Revolution, and, excepting the more rigid puritans of the Mountain, from Camille Desmoulins to Barres, influence, one might say, every actor of the period. They were philanthropic tendencies, inspired by momentary impulses of kindness rather than by a conception of life, and of its law,-tendencies of a vague, sterile, superficial deism, which relegated God to heaven and sundered His undying connection with the world, and which was merely a compromise between the tradition still extant in the popular mind, and the scepticism that, however covertly, dominated Voltaire and his followers,-tendencies of antagonism to every imposed authority, to every form of superstition and fanaticism, but born rather of a sense of rebellion natural to one who thinks, than of faith in the destinies of those who have yet to learn to think,-tendencies that worshipped the rights of reason, but only for those individuals who by good fortune and education can share in them, and which were mingled with some spirit of contempt for the masses, a spirit which afterwards founded the fatal distinction between the popular and the bourgeois classes,-tendencies of equality, but confined, as in the philosophy of the ancients, to one order of men, regardless of the rest. mentioned the bourgeois class, and Voltaire was, in fact, consciously or unconsciously, the teacher and master of the bourgeoise, and his influence was allpowerful in the acts that, in the period just before the Revolution traced the first lines of a division that has been more recently organised into a system, by Guizot and the French eclectic school bourgeoisie of the two Bourbon Revolutions idolised A man of impulses, of intuitions, rapid but short-lived, of enthusiasm, intellectual rather than moral. Voltaire, who displayed rare humanity in his efforts to clear the memory of Calas and the Sirven family. was flatterer at once of the Empress Catherine and King Frederic of Prussia He sanctified their crimes . he burlesqued, in low comic verse, the heroic resistance of the Poles to the dismemberment of their Fatherland An apostle of toleration in religious matters, he was the type of intolerance towards all his enemies, and capable of using any weapon, even calumny, to their prejudice. He waged a relentless, rabid war against catholicism, and when threatened with death wrote a declaration of catholic faith and repentance. I write this as a debt to my own conscience, and because I see arising among our young men, who have neither studied all his works nor his life, an intemperate and dangerous admiration for him; but it is more important to my present purpose to note how Voltaire destroyed prejudices and errors, but neither built nor cared for the future He had no perception (his historical works and his theory that great events depend upon little causes prove this) of a Law dominating the life of Humanity, no perception of Progress, of a human mission, of Duty, of Association, or of anything that constitutes the end and the method of the new Era that we invoke. He recognised no standard of good except in the rights of the individual And like all who start from the idea of right alone, he could not help being forced to give the preference to rights already existing and recognised. He declared that "a State being a collection of lands and houses, those who possessed neither land nor house ought not to have any deliberative voice in the management of public affairs" Ir one of the most beautiful moments of his long life. he gave full expression to the idea that guided him when he uttered, under guise of a blessing on Franklin's young son, the sacred but insufficient words—God and Luberty; a formula that opens the way to a possible initiative, but does not itself initiate. Liberty is a mere instrument of good or evil according to the path it chooses.

Montesqueu, a more profound thinker than Voltaire, though less profound than some say, was the chief of a political school that had for its disciples, in the first period of the Revolution, Monnier, Malouet, amany others in the Assembly, Rivarol, Bergasse, Mallet Dupan, and others in the periodical press. The influence of the ideas he expounded in the Esprit des Last is visible in the acts of the Constituent Assembly.

Assembly. His influence lay in his historical studies of antiquity. that would be thought superficial at the present day. but then appeared vast and almost unique His intellect was acute, and swift in seizing the salient points of things, his aspirations were advanced, the expression of his thoughts vigorous Montesquieu was at times unconsciously impelled, by his native logic, near to the unknown confines of the new Age, but he was hindered by his lack of any religious conception of the life of Humanity, by the prevailing theory of the ebb and flow of Nations, perhaps, too, by the inevitable influences of a semi-patrician birth and the conditions of office, and so he retreated ever more and more towards the old Age, and never, even in his most daring flights, crossed the limits of a period that began the transition For an instant he caught a glimpse of the true definition of liberty, when he said that it consisted "in being able to do what one ought to will, and in not being constrained to do what one ought not to will" (Book XI c iii) But this was a momentary flash, an isolated saving, whose consequences he was unable to deduce He suspected the existence of a general end, common to humanity, and a special end, belonging to each nation. but he was incapable of rising from that glimpse of an idea to the conception of a providential mission. He notes "that the object of Rome was aggrandisement. of Lacedemonia, war, of the Judaic laws, religion; of Marseilles, commerce, of the barbanans, natural liberty", but he never saw that those facts were only means to reach the end, and that the appointed end is general progressive civilisation, the slow formation of a collective human unity It is clear from twenty passages that he feels in his soul the superiority of the republican form of government to all others, and yet, finding no body of principles that convert the intuition of the moment into a demonstrated truth, he concludes by labouring to teach how a monarchy may be durably established He too, in all his researches, starts only from the individual, and so, like all who have no other criterion of Truth, he can only grasp the notion of right For him, as for the other philosophic thinkers of the time, there are rights consecrated by the fact of their existence, by prolonged possession, and the political programme is reduced to efforts to find a place for them in the social organism, and to seek an impossible equilibrium that shall preserve the peace among them, and prevent one right from doing violence to another. Placed between a monarchy that said "France is mine," an aristocracy powerful by past domination and an exclusive influence over the monarchy, and the first threatening murmurings of the Tiers Etat, Montesquieu did not pretend to pass judgment on those three forces, or ascertain the sum of vitality that existed in each, and which was doomed to early death, which destined to long life in the future. They existed, and he accepted them, consecrating the labour of his intellect to coordinate their existence and functions in the organisation of the State His ideal was the English system, the result, not of any conception of political philosophy, but of a unique historical development of causes and effects which existed nowhere else. His theory is that which we have seen in practice for more than half a century under the name of constitutional monarchy. where the search for an equilibrium between the three elements of Crown, and Nobility, and Commons, has

The problem, therefore, in the Espert des Lois is vistanced by a fundamental error. Montesque labours heavily about the distinction between the three Powers, engilative, executive, and judiciary, and makes this the cardinal point of the whole question, he thus, by evaggerating this distinction, destroys the conception of National Unity. The real, these sole, the wild question should be, for him as for us all, the question of Sovereignty, what is its origin, and where is interpretation is to be sought with the least uncertainty and the greatest probability.

There does not, and ought not to exist more than one Law, it is its application to the diverse branches of social life that implies a distinction in the higher branches of the administration between the different functions delegated to provide for its execution. Tust as the exaggeration of the triple aspect of life in God changed little by little the three different aspects of divine action into Three Persons, and founded a Tri-theism in religion opposed to the conception of Unity, so the theory of rights, and hence of acquired rights, impelled Montesquieu to discover powers where they did not exist, and found a political Tri-theism which has survived even to this day, and impairs every conception of national organisation Having raised these social elements to Powers, he confers on them attributes which suffice to break up the harmony of the State He was confronted by the danger, either of antagonism between the three powers, or compulsory stagnation, but he replied with superficial carelessness, "that, as they were urged forward by the necessary movement of things, they would be constrained to move in unison."

Montesquieu abounds in false ideas respecting the hereditary nature of the aristocracy, the function of the monarchy, the rights conceded to the executive over the legislative, and many other questions. But it is not may task to notice them. It is sufficient for my purpose to have reminded my readers of the thought that dominates his conceptions He has no criterion outside that of the individual. He reaches no formula of political organisation beyond that of rights. He has no scope, no mission to suggest for the State, except liberty, and by liberty he understands, in the general course of his work, nothing more than "the citizen's consciousness of his own safety, and of having nothing to fear from any other citizen." Political science is therefore parrowed to a science of limits, of mutual defence. And the government, deprived of any other mission, is to use the force of society to watch that those limits are not overstepped by violence A Religious conception, the Law of Progress, Duty, Association, the and assumed to Humanity and to each People, collective Education, and the office of the Press to gradually promote the unity of the human family, everything, in short, that is characteristic of the Age we call for, is unknown to the man who inspired the Constituent Assembly

He summarised, with singular acumen, the conditions and consequences of political laws as he found them. incomplete or in partial activity, in the period in which He sketched in outline, not always, but frequently exact, the existing tradition, but nothing When we point to him, at the present time, as the master of future legislation, we commit the same error as when we make poor Machiavelli the guardian of the cradle of reborn Italy-Machiavelli, who anatomised the dead body of old Italy and showed the wounds that caused her death, when we take Adam Smith-who was but the wise exponent of the laws that governed the economic phenomena of his time-and make him the founder of an immutable science, the teacher of an Age in which the economic relations between class and class are hastening to an inevitable change

Rousseau, the inspirer of the Convention, followed another road, but without passing the confines of the Age that France was preparing to summarise A poor plebelap, without deep study of the past abhoring the times in the consciousness of his own superiority, and for the exaggerated demands of Society as he found it. he, on the great political questions of the day, questioned only his own intelligence and the intuitions of the heart His intelligence was more powerful than that of Montesquieu, his heart was led astray by a leaven of egotism that too often soured his natural inclination to good, and both together drove him to the principle that takes its birth, if not its consecration, from him-the principle of popular sovereignty. A true principle, if considered as the best method of interpreting a supreme Moral Law which a nation has accepted as its guide. which is solemnly declared in its Contract and transmitted by National Education, but a false and anarchical principle if proclaimed in the name of force, or in the name of a Convention, and abandoned to the caprice of majorities, uneducated and corrupted by a false conception of life

For Rousseau, the popular sovereignty remained in these last terms, uncertain, meffective, shifting He, too, had no conception of the collective life of Humanity, of its tradition, of the Law of Progress appointed for the generations, of a common end towards which we ought to strive, of Association that can alone attain it step by step Starting from the philosophy of the ego and of individual liberty, he robbed that principle of fruit by basing it. not on a Duty common to all not on a definition of man as an essentially social creature, not on the conception of a divine Authority and a providential design, not on the bond that unites the individual to Humanity of which he is a factor, but on a simple contiention, avowed or understood. All Rousseau's teaching proceeds from the assertion "that social right is not derived from nature, but is based upon conventions "1 He drives this doctrine so far as to comprehend the family itself within it. "Sons," he says, "do not remain united to their fathers except so long as they have need of them for their preservation . From that time forth the family is only maintained in virtue of a convention" contracting individuals as the only source of social life. nothing could result but a political system capable of protecting within the limits of a narrow possibility, the liberty and equality of each citizen, and Rousseau has no other programme "The aim of every system of legislation"-these are his very words-"reduces itself to two principal objects, liberty and equality" (Book II c vi), and earlier, in c iv of Book I, "to find a form of society that shall defend and protect with all the collective forces the person and the property of each associate. and in which each one, uniting himself to all, shall obey only himself and remain as free as he was before this is the fundamental problem." Stated in these terms, the problem contains neither the elements of normal progress nor the possibility of solving the social economic question that is so prominently agitating men's minds in our time. An isolated sentence in the book seems to lay down the principle that "no citizen ought to be rich enough to be in a position to buy another, none poor enough to be constrained to sell himself"; this is just, but it does not connect itself with the general bearing of the principles he expounds, nor is there any indication how it may be reduced to fact. It is of little importance that in many particulars he is superior to every other thinker of that period The Society of Rousseau, like that of Montesquieu, is a mutual insurance society, and nothing more.

That first statement, the key of the whole system, is by now proven to be false, and, because false, fatal to the development of the principle of popular Sovereignty It is not by the force of conventions or of aught else, but by a necessity of our nature that Societies are founded and grow. Each of us is a part of Humanity, each of us lives its life, each is called upon to live for it, to aid the attainment of the end assigned to it, to realise, as far as possible in each one of us, the ideal type, the divine thought that guides it. Law is one and the same for individual and collective life, both of which are the expression of a single universal phenomenon, differently modified by space and time. And life, we know now.

is Progress If you throw over Moial Authority, our natural tendencies, our mission, and substitute the merely human authority of conventions as the source of social development, you risk arresting that development, or subjecting it to arbitrary caprice. And since you need the consent of all the contracting parties to dissolve these conventions and make a change for the better, you are threatened, on the one hand by the power of every minority, logically indeed of every individual, to stop you, on the other hand, masmuch as the prolonged existence of a fact pre-supposes, at all events, a tacit convention, you are threatened by the necessity of perpetuating rights and powers that are not founded on justice, or conducive to the common good No "man" has, you say, "natural authority over his fellows Might cannot create right, therefore conventions are left as the only basis of legitimate authority" But is there not an authority higher than any man, in the True, the Just, the end which we have set before us and which we are bound above all things to discover? Is not some of that authority passed on to the people or to that fraction of the people which is its best interpreter? And, to discover that end, do we not possess the double criterion supplied when the Tradition of Humanity and the conscience of our times both harmonise? And for a method of practical verification, can we not examine whether this item of discovered truth profits or not the common progress? Rousseau believed in God, but in his study of human phenomena he continually forgot

Rousseau believed in God He believed—and it is well to remnd of this those republican materialists who venerate the Contrat Social—that a State could not be established without having religion for its foundation And he pushed this belief to the fanaticism of intolerance, declaring (Book IV c vm) that the Sovereign power could calle from the state all who disbeleved in God and Immortality, and condemn any citizen to death who, after publicly confessing his belief in those dogmas, by his subsequent conduct convicted himself of deliberate falsehood. But he confined himself within a narrow desim that placed God far off in heaven, and never understood his universal, never-dying life manifested in Creation, he was ignorant of the Law of Progress—the sole but potent and living mediator between God and Humanity, he was fettered by the individualist philosophy, he had no glimpse of any religion besides Christianity, and so he was incapable of deducing and anophing the logical consequences of his fath to Society

Like Voltaire and Montesquieu, Rousseau was not the intellectual herald of an Age. His conception, though more daring, more explicit, more advanced than theirs, never passes the limits of the individualist world, elaborated by the Pagan-Christian Age. The influence of the three schools with which these names are associated could not push the Revolution beyond those limits, to the World of Progress and Association for which we are wow firbtune.

Did France collectively effect what these three great and influential thinkers failed to effect? Did she, by writte of enthussam, cross the boundaries of that world within which their doctunes were confined? Often, the state of the state o

The best method of gauging the value of a Revolution is to thoroughly scrutimes the series of solemn declarations made in its name by the collective authorities, freely chosen by the people to represent the movement, or by the extra-legal movements of the people itself, when they announce a determined end, and leave a mark that points in the direction of the future Every revolution has, by the very nature of things, isolated geniuses out side its own orbit. They are the aerolites of the moral world, and give indications of important eccentric phenomena, but teach us nothing as to the path of the planet To select, as some do, from a speech of Claude Fauchet or St Just, a chance unconscious phrase, in contradiction with the whole, and argue from it the spirit of the Revolution, is to falsify the historic significance of great events, it is to mistake the aerolite for the planet.

The first solemn declaration of the spirit of the Revolution is seen in the Instructions given by the electoral colleges to the deputies that represented the three orders. Clergy, Nobles, and Third Estate, in the States-General The members elected numbered 1200, 600 for the Third Estate, 300 for each of the privileged orders The electors, who voted indirectly, in two removes, for the Third Estate and the lower Clergy, and directly for the remaining members, reached the total of six

Since the time of Louis XIV France had been suffer ing a material and moral decadence Morally, the insolent, brazen corruption of the Court under the Regency of Philip of Oileans and Louis XV had in fected the nobility and the higher bourgeoisie luxury, the decay in morals, the arbitrary rule of the Government and men of position was unbounded, one would be tempted to say that the details given us were hes invented by historians, were they not confirmed by contemporary documents. It is not my purpose to re peat them here, but the squandering of money, which from the time of Louis XIV to the Regency, had rui up the debt of France to three milliards, explains how a hundred servants were often collected in a single palace, how 150,000 francs were spent annually in dinner. alone by a financier, Samuel Bernard, just as the seraght

of young girls, bought or kidnapped for the king.1 since the days of Pompadour, explains the private life of the nobles, of whom fifteen out of twenty did not live with their wives, and as the fifty State prisons, nearly all governed by Tesuits, into which the inmates entered for an indefinite time, without trial, and in virtue of a royal or ministerial order that the minister often gave away in blank or sold, explains the custom of fathers to imprison at times sons to be rid of the annovance of a projected marriage, or of wives who thus escaped the over-watchful eyes of unloyed husbands Tust as a lesion of the brain afflicts the whole organism with disease. so a corrupt monarchy, slowly but mevitably, corrupts the whole country. In the meantime, in contrast with this life in high places, poverty and misery had increased among the people, and most markedly among the cultivators of the soil, to a degree that would appear incredible, if we had not at hand the testimonies of men of all classes, men who were more than moderate in their views, from Bossuet to Fénélon, from Vauban to Bois-Guillebert, from the reports of the Intendants of the Provinces to those of the Minister Argenson Speculators, seconded by the Government and the more covetious courtiers, traded on this misery, and had organised what was termed by contemporaries the Pact of Hunger By a series of market operations the whole corn of the country was exported, and when the premium paid on exportations had been received, the whole stock was accumulated in Jersey or Guernsey and other depots, and sold again, when the needs of the people had reached their greatest extremity, at very high prices, as though it had arrived from America

From such conditions, with these causes for indignation long repressed, there arose unexpectedly, suddenly, by the convocation of the States-General, which the urgent need of money had wrested from the king, a people of six millions, that gave voice to its wants in the Instructions The frenzed, tortured soul of France and the character of the movement then berinning.

were bound to be plainly revealed in them. And the Instructions—the Cahiers as they were termed in France -did reveal them. The Revolution, irritated by the many-sided opposition, developed a prodigious energy in the means it adopted to obtain satisfaction for the popular demands, but in substance, hardly, if at all, advanced beyond them

The Instructions express an immense aspiration for liberty and civil equality. The individual, violated, repressed, downtrodden for centuries, panted for life, and asserted itself in the nonular Programme given to the Revolution. But that Programme does not contradict the fundamental proposition of my article. It is not the programme of the new Age, that we who love, fight, and hope foresee to-day It is not based on a new definition of Tafe It does not initiate, it reasons out, and summarises previous acquisitions of the intellect, which had been left sterile and inoneigtive in the sphere of facts It does not escape from the circle of Christian inspirations, it only demands, like the Hussites, the cut for all that the rewards promised in heaven shall be realised upon the earth, that the dogma of the salvation of the individual by means of individual works shall have an application in this world

The Instructions of the Nobility are naturally inferior to the others A breath of equality is, however, felt at times in their pages. They demand an equal distribution of taxes, the abolition of exceptional tribunals, uniformity of penalties for all, the abolition of ferocious punishments, the publicity of criminal trials. Some few among the localities suggest that all men of worth should be admitted to public offices Three, Peronne, Montdidier and Rove, suggest that judges should be nominated by the king from lists drawn up by the people. But the old spirit shortly afterwards turns up, dominant, in the demand for the maintenance of seigneurial justice, of the exclusive right of hunting in feudal lands, of the exclusion of the non-noble from the higher military ranks, etc., and by these exceptions cancels their scanty instincts for good especially, are better, more frequently, so powerful is the influence even of worn-out and corrupt religion inspired by a love of the people and a sense of more advanced equality. In many localities they demand a system of National Education, not to be left to local caprice, but based on uniform principles approved by the States-General, and also free schools for both seves in every commune. In some they demand the erection of hospitals in the richer communes, and, what is of more importance, the exemption from taxation of men who live by their daily toil, in others, measures in favour of public morality, a most righteous suppression of publications tending to corrupt it, and the repression of prostitution, in others again, the emancipation of the negroes Politically they demand the permanency of the States-General, or their convocation at least every five years, ministerial responsibility, the abolition of all exceptional tribunals, the foundation of Boards of Arbitration, the inviolability of the secrecy of the Post. municipal freedom, and the election of communal magistrates by the people, the codification of the law, publicity of justice, the mitigation and equalisation of punishments the abolition of judicial torture, of confiscation and banishment, next-from a spirit of anlagonism to the nobility, which the latter reciprocated-the abolition of feudal rights, of caste privileges, and every monopoly of public offices In religious matters the clergy confessed the decay of discipline and the need of reform, and some of them indicate as a remedy the convocation of a National Council and Provincial Synods, others, that plurality of benefices should be abolished, that the clergy should be compelled to reside in their cures, that all titles to office should be derived from merit and viitue . some few recall the old popular elections and prefer the restriction of episcopal authority. None the less, the exclusive Catholic conception betrays itself and entirely dominates the Instructions, destroying at once the good results of the measures they ask for The clergy demand that education shall be entrusted solely to the religious orders, that the University shall not receive professors

unless proved to be adherents of the Catholic fault, that the censorship shall be maintained for all publications, that an ecclesistical committee shall have the power to condemn any books opposed to the teaching of the Church, and that the Government shall then proceed to suppress them, that Catholicism shall be recognised as the sole and dominant religion, that certain provisions be made to the prejudice of non-Catholics, that the concessions of civil rights and marriage given to the Protestants by the edict of 1787 be revoked But the two privileged orders could not express the feeling of the Nation the Third Estate alone could do that. And, taken generally, the Instructions of the Third Estate affirm the sovereignty of the Nation, the necessity of a Declaration of Rights, of the convocation of the States-General independently of the will of any individual, the inviolability of the Deputies, and the responsibility of Ministers, next, freedom of conscience. freedom of the Press, freedom of internal trade, individual liberty, suppression of State prisons and of exceptional jurisdictions. Jurors are to be the judges of fact, indemnity is to be made to any prisoner declared to be innocent, the law is to be codified, property is to be equally divided among children, entail to be abolished. Such are the demands of the several localities Others claim an equal distribution of taxation, assessment by the provincial Estates, journeymen being exempt, others, the uniformity of weights and measures, the establishment of discount banks wherever the commercial conditions are favourable boards of arbitration, fiee justice, a commercial code, others, the organisation of a public health department, hospitals, foundling asylums, the direction of education to the double purpose of developing in the pupils a strong physical constitution and a knowledge of the principles necessary to man and the French citizen. some few demand that ecclesiastical offices be filled by popular election, that the religious orders shall be totally or partially suppressed, that tithes shall be reduced, lottenes and gaming establishments abelished

they ask for the erection of country hospitals, offices for chantable relief, work for the able-bodied, aid to the sick, loans on easy terms to workmen and to cultivators of the soil

On this magnificent programme, of which I only give a rapid sketch, was superimposed, in the Instructions of the three orders, the twofold dogma of the Christian world—Catholicism and Monarchy The former was declared the religion of the State,—the latter asserted to be inseparable from the life of the Nation, hereditary and inviolable, But not one of the reforms they indicated advances beyond what I call the doctrine of the individual and of the Age from which we are trying to escape to-day The conception of Life from which all those Instructions emanated was identical with that which I have already shown as inspiring the Encyclopædists, and Montesquieu, and Rousseau The end of human existence is for all of them material well-being, the means to reach it, liberty. They desire the inviolability of conscience, of the expression of thought, of action, of private correspondence, because "the natural liberty of each man, his personal security, his absolute independence from all authorsty except that of the written law, require it." Liberty in the Instructions given by Nemours and other localities is stated to be "the right of each man to do without hindrance whatever does not injure his fellow-men" "Men," say the Instructions of Nivernais and Rennes, "have only renounced the use of private force that they may be more effectively protected by public force, and this is the only source of the reciprocal obligations of citizens, of citizens towards Society, of Society towards them " From Paris. Marseilles, Nemours, Mérindol, Aurons, St Vaast, Rosny, St. Sulpice, Villers-Cotterêts, from twenty other places there appears with one voice the ruling principle of the Instructions, that "natural rights" shall constitute the " basis of the Government of France," that the "preserv ation of rights" is the "sole object" of political societies

This idea is so universal that it induces them to reject

conscription in the organisation of the army, and to substitute soluntary enlistment, thus destroying, from reverence for the rights of the individual, one of the most sacred duties of a citizen, the duty of defending the Fatherland by arms, and ti implest them to propose the abolition of the oath to defendants, to speak the Truth, from respect for the right of defence in the individual, forgetting that it is the duty of every man, whether accused or not to sneak the Truth

The acts of the Revolution will, I hope, demonstrate how this conception condemned it, in its first long stage, to waste its forces in the search for an impossible stage, to waste its forces in the search for an impossible anarmony between two opposing principles, and in a system of gwarantes, ineffectual in practical organisation, misted of the positive and clucational function of the Government. Now, this is the only vital point to be noted. The Instructions, important as they are, and based in great part on truth, show a consciousness, entire of the mission of life, nor of a collective end, nor of the law of Progress as a method, nor of aught else that passes beyond the horizon durily viewed from the Christian beaven, or the science of the individual

FROM THE COUNCIL TO GOD

ONE thousand five hundred and forty-four years ago, the first Geomenical Council of believers in the religion of Jesus met together at Nice. You are now net together in a new Council—your last—in Rome. The first Council was the soleim and venerable consecration of the trumph and organised unity of the religion needed by the age. The present Council—whatever you mend by it—will proclaim the great fact of the death of a religion, and, therefore, of the mevitable and not distant advant of another.

Thurty-seven years ago I wrote certain pages entitled, From the Pope to the Council In those pages—misunderstood, as usual, by superficial readers—I declared the Fapacy to be morally extinct, and invoked the meeting of a Religious Council to declare that fact to the peoples But the Council I desired was not yours It was a Council convoked by a free people, united in worship of duty and of the ideal, to be composed of the worthest in intelligiest and virtue among the believers in things eternal, in the mission of God's creature upon mings eternal, in the mission of God's creature upon who should meet together for the purpose of religiously metrogating the pulsations of the beart of Collective Humanity, and to demand of that prophetic but uncertain mistinct of the future which exists in the peoples

within you? At a later period (in 1847), when the same Pope who now bids you declare him Infallible was hesitating between the suggestions of vanity flattered by popular applause and the inherent tendencies of despotic power. when all the Italians, both learned and unlearned. frantically endeavoured to make of him their leader in their struggle for nationality and liberty, I alone-in a letter also misunderstood-frankly declared to him the truth that a new faith was destined to take the place of the old that the new faith would not accept any privileged Interpreter between the people and God and that, if he desired to avail himself of the enthusiasm by which he was surrounded, and become himself the initiator of the new epoch and the new faith, he must descend from the Papal throne, and go forth among the people an apostle of truth, like Peter the Hermit preaching the Crusades I quote myself, reluctantly, that you may know that, in thus addressing you, I am neither moved by the hasty impulse of a rebellious soul, nor by foolish anger at the Pope's withholding Rome from my country. We shall have Rome-even before your fate is sealedso soon as the republican banner is again raised in Italy It is from a profound conviction, matured by long and earnest meditation, and confirmed by the study and experience of more than a third of a century. that, in the face of a Pope who, by his syllabus, has thrown his gauntlet of defiance to the idea of the progressive mission of humanity in the face of a Council composed of the members of one Church only. without the intervention of any possible representawithout the intervention of any possible representatives of the dawning Church of the future, I declare

That your faith is irrevocably doomed to perish that, whether as promoters of a new schism, if you separate on the question of the Pope's pretensions, or as suicidal destroyers of the primitive conception of your Church, if you submerge it in the arbitrary will of an individual,

you are and will be mentably cut off from, and excommuncated by, humanty, and that we, who are believers more than you, and more than you solicitous of a religious future of the world, reject beforehand your decrees, and appeal from your Council to God, to God the Father and Educator of man, to the God of life, not of things dead; to the God of all men, not of a caste.

The three hundred and twenty bishops who met together at Nice did lawfully represent the multitude of believers they were the issue of a democratic inspiration, which is the soul of every rising faith: they were the elect of the clergy and the people

You are but a pitful anstocracy, created and consecrated by power, and, hice the elements of all falling institutions, without root in the heart of the Church, the people of behievers You represent nothing but a hierarchy, the reflex of the thought of others, in which every spontaneous thought is regarded as rebellion.

The majority of the first Council boic upon their brows the signs of sacred sorrow fell for the numberless races of slaves disniherated of every human right, and the traces of persecutions undergone for the sake of the faith that promised them emancipation; the greater number of them were poor

Lyou make display of luxury and wealth—there is no sign upon your brows of the sorrows that purify and refine, nor pallor, save that of constant inertha and idle case of indifference to the misenes of millions of brothers given to you by God, and to the vital questions by which our hearts are tormented ?

You worship Force, force which, from Prometheus

to Galileo, has ever sought to enchain the revealers and precursors of the future to the motionless rock of present fact Before this force do you how down and preach to the peoples blind submission, even when it violates the moral law, as you invoke its aid, whether proffered by infidels to your faith or not, when-

past, and you curse the generation which will not cannot, follow you in your labour of Sisynhiis I am no materialist Young men of narrow intellect and superficial education, but warm-hearted and irritated to excess against a dead past which still would dominate the present, whose vanity is flattered by an idea of intellectual daring, who lack capacity to discover in that which has been, the law of that which shall be, are led to confound the negation of a worn-out form of religion, with denial of that eternal religion which is innate in the human soul, and in them materialism assumes the aspect of a generous rebellion, and is often accompanied by power of sacrifice and sincere reverence for liberty. But when diffused among the peoples, materialism slowly but infallibly extinguishes the fire of high and noble thought, as well as every spark of free life, through the exclusive worship of material well-being, and finally prostrates them before successful violence, before the despotism of the fast accomple Materialism extinguished every spark of Italian life amongst us three centuries ago, as, eighteen centuries earlier, it had extinguished all republican virtue in Rome, as it would-should it again be infused among our multitudes-extinguish every germ of future greatness in our newborn Italy. Morally, materialism is disinherited of all criterion of right, or principle of collective education. Between the idea of an intelligent, preordained law, which assigns to human life an aim, and the idea of a blind, unreasoning, fatal force of facts, or transitory phenomena, there is no middle path, and materialists, by ignoring the first, are necessarily driven to the worship of the second, and prostrate themselves, sooner or later, before the despotism (whether its method be Bonapartist bayonets or republican guillotines is of little matter) of force Admitting neither a providential conception regulating the existence of collective humanity, nor the immortality of the individual Ego, they may, illogically, utter the holy words progress and duty, but they have deprived the first of its basis, and the second of its source. The senseless, brutal doctrine cancels from men's minds the only real virtue, sacrifice, for, although individual followers of that doctrine may be urged by a religious instinct within them to fulfil it, they cannot teach it, What avails martyrdom for a holy idea, when all pledge of future benefit to the race, or even to the individual himself, is destroyed? Amid the darkness of a world deprived of all ideal, in a brief, tormented existence, ungoverned by any law save sensation and the appetites to which it gives rise, the answer of mankind to every moral lesson will be, Egotism Such has, in fact, been their answer in all those periods when a common faith has passed away, and given place to the anarchy of cold and sterile negations panem et arcenses each for himself Interest, lord of all

Scientifically, interest is based upon a periodical confusion in men's minds of the instruments of life with life itself, of the manifestations of the Ego, with the Ego itself, of the consequences and applications of thought, with the thinking being itself, of the secondary forces revealed in the operation of the organism, with the initial force which excites, moderates, examines, and compares those operations, of the limited, transitory, relative, and contingent phenomena which alone are accessible to the organism, with the life which links them all to that absolute and eternal truth which alone gives value and significance to those phenomena, of the application of the human faculties to the eternal world, with the faculties themselves, of effects, with causes, of the real, with the ideal, of facts, with the law by which they are governed

That Eco which reflects upon the phenomena of the organism, is not that organism, that life which forms the harmony and unity of the whole, which consciously and mindfully directs the special functions towards a given aim, is not those functions themselves, the being which ponders of the future, of providence, of God, of immortality, of the infinite, of choice between good and evil, which resists the impulse of the senses and denies their swav-now in Athens and now on Golgotha, now in the prison of Petroni and now on the national battle-field, in sacrifice of self-is not those senses themselves

The experimentalism of those children lisping science who call themselves materialists, is but one fragment of science, it simply verifies, through as many facts as it can muster, the discoveries of intuition, those sudden, spontaneous discoveries made by the rapid, intense concentration of all the faculties upon a given point And the facts themselves which, being embraced and explained by hypothesis and discovery, demonstrate truth, require, in order to be usefully observed, interpreted and classified, the guidance of a principle, a pre-accepted conception of law Synthesis, the innate supreme faculty of the human soul, illumines the path of analysis from on high, without its aid analysis could but stumble uncertainly and impotently along a labyrinth of facts, of aspect and bearing constantly differing according to their relation to other facts.

There is a harmony between the order of things and the human mind, pre-existent to all experiment, which does but ascertain and define that harmony Equally maccessible to experiment are man's con-

Experiment may give us the accidents, not the essence of things, to reach that essence, seepnee must maintain its connecting link with religion. (Without a theory or method, all real, true, and fruitful seence is impossible. The method is furnished by our conception of the aim of life, the aim, once secretained, affirms the relation between man and humanity, between humanity and the universe; the universe and God—law and life. Now the aim, which is the discovery and progressive realisation of the design according to which the universe realisation of the design according to which the universe the universe and conductive the means, can only be found through a philosophical religious conception.

Science seveals and masters the material and intellectual forces given to man wherewith to realise the aim, but the aim itself is determined by the religious synthesis of the period, and the religious synthesis is the sanction of the duty of each man to avail himself of those forces in furtherance of the aim, according to his faculties. To break this union is to render science sterile. Humanity pursues a different course, and when the history of science shall be rightly written, it will demonstrate that to every great religion is attached a corresponding epoch of fruitful scientific progress, and that, although during the periods of transition between the fall of one religion and the rise of another, Science may discover phenomena and collect facts which offer materials for the

and their law, as is the case at the present day

Historically, materialism is inexorably, invariably representative and characteristic of a period of transition between one religious faith and another, when all unity of conception and of aim being lost, and lost every sense of a common doctrine and true philosophic method. human intellect invariably falls back upon the mere anatomy of facts, refuses the guidance of synthesis, and is left with one criterion of truth only-the Ego disjoined from Collective Humanity and God-negation and anarchy It is but a funeral lamp that dimly illumines a hier and is only extinguished when, inspired by the breath of the future, the bier is transformed into the cradle of the new faith, not ascertained, but invoked by the majority, and forefelt to be inevitable and near. This moment is approaching more rapidly than is generally believed, in spite of all that you men of the past, and true prolongers of the disastrous period of transition, can do to prevent it Meanwhile materialism denies humanity, in which the religious sense, like the artistic and philosophical, is an alienable element of life it denies tradition - the harmony of which with the voice of individual inspiration and conscience is the sole criterion of truth we possess on earth it denies history, which teaches us that religions are transitory, but Religion is eternal it denies the solemn witness borne in adoration of God and the Ideal, by the long senes of our greatest minds, from Socrates to Humboldt, from Phidias to Michel-Angelo, from Æschylus to Byron it denies the power of revelation innate in man, in order to date the discovery of truth from the meagre labours upon a fragment of creation studied by one single faculty of the mind of a Moleshott, Buchner, or other, Not for you do I write this-you are nearly all of you practical materialists-but for my young fellow countrymen, good, but misled, and, because I hold that no man who assumes to speak of the future of our rising Italy has henceforth a right to keep silence as to his own religious belief, or to abstain from uttering his protest against the irruptions of the Barbarians of thought who rave amid the ruins of an epoch

I am not ungrateful to that epoch, nor irreverent to those grand runs. I am not forgetful of the giganuc step taken by humanity towards its destined aim, through the religious faith in the name of which you are met together. Neither have I forgotten that we owe to it, not only the idea of the unity of the human family, and of the equality and emancipation of souls, but also the salvation of the rules of our anterior Laten cuvisation, and the recall of my fast-expring country to the life half-extraguished by her barbarian invaders, by awakening har to the consciousness of her second mission in the world.

The salvation of Christianity, and through it of European civilisation, through the unity of your hierarchy during a period of darkness and anarchy-the spirit of love towards the poor and afflicted outcasts of society. which inspired your early bishops and popes-the severe struggle sustained by them in the name of the Moral law against the arbitrary power and ferocity of feudal lords and conquering kings-the great mission (misunderstood in our day by those who know nothing or comprehend nothing of history) fulfilled by that giant of intellect and will, Giegory VII, and the fruitful victory won by him in aid of the rule of mind over 10yal arms, of the Italian over the German element-the mission of civilising conquest you fulfilled among semibarbarous peoples, the impulse given to agriculture by your monks during the first three centuries, the preservation of the language of our fathers, the splendid epoch of art inspired by faith in your dogma, the learned works of your Benedictines, the commencement of gratuitous education, the foundation of institutions of benevolence, your sisters of mercy.-I remember all these things, and bow down in reverence before the image of your past

But wherefore do you, in a world wherein all things, by God's decree, die and are transformed, seek to live for ever? Why pretend that a past, which has been extinguished for ever beneath five hundred years of mertia and impotence, should live again in the future? How is it that, in the face of three centuries of dismemberment into an infinitude of Protestant sects, and of a century of philosophical incredulity, amid the reappearance of all those signs and warnings which characterised the intermediate period between the fall of Paganism and the rise of the Christian era, you see not that your mission is concluded, that the world is urged onward in search of a new heaven and a new earth? Wherefore, in the face of the grand tradition of humanity, throughout the course of which God reveals to us the Law of life he gave to all, which teaches you through its succession of religions the gradual continuous revelation of a Truth of which each historic epoch acquires a fragment, and none the whole, do you persist in believing, or asserting-you, whose religion had its beginning, and who represent but one epoch among many-that you hold that entue truth within your grasp? How dare you strive to violate alike the Providential design and the free conscience of mankind. by restricting within a given narrow, the limitless ascending spiral traced by the finger of God between the universe and the Ideal it is destined slowly to attain?

I do not accuse you, as do our copyists of other (French or German) copyists of the eighteenth century, of having-impostors from the earliest times-built up a religion in order to attain to power Humanity does not tolerate a lying Fable for eighteen hundred years. If the majority amongst ourselves were believers as fervent and sincere as were the men of your faith during the first thirteen hundred years, God's new truth-of which at present we have but faintest glimpses-would already unite the multitudes in harmony of belief

I do not accuse you of having disseminated errors. which for long years past have impeded or misled mankind upon questions which have become of vital moment at the present day Every religion is the issue of the times, and the expression of an essentially imperfect stage in the education of the human race, but each contains a truth destined to live for ever, although overshadowed by passing error, and that amount of truth which it was possible for the age to accept and to incarrate in action, was weldy and beneficially diffused or the contained of the contained to the contained to the contained the contained to the contained by you I do not accuse you—though I might with better foundation—of having been the inexorable persecutors of all who differed from you. I remember how terror was erected into a system, only sixty years back, by the advocates of heberty, and I know, moreover, that every religion founded upon the belief in an immediate, direct, and superhuman revelation, cannot fail to be

I do not accuse you of persisting in the attempt to nail us down to a conception of God and of the relation between God and man belied by science, and against which every faculty of heart and mind granted to man for the discovery of truth, and matured by eighteen hundred vears of aspination, study, suffering, and victory.

tyrant of souls I accuse you of having closed your eyes in vanity and lust of power, and refused to perceive that, even as one existence succeeds another, so does one mission succeed another, and each and all are governed and

Life is love You know no longer how to love The voice of your chief is only heard in groans of discouragement: the formula of your declarations is an anathema __

Life is movement, aspiration, progress You deny progress, shrink in terror from all aspiration, crucify humanity upon Calvary, reject every attempt to detach the idea from the symbol, and strive to petrify the living

Word of God You reduce all history (which is the successive manifestation of that Word) to a single moment, you extinguish free will (without which no consciousness of progress can exist) beneath the fatalism works or sacrifice by the omnipotence of grace of hereditary responsibility, and cancel all merit in Life is communion communion with nature and with man, wheresoever he loves, struggles, or hopes, and with God You have attempted, by denying the continuity of creation, and the universal diffusion of the creative spirit, to imprison the Deity in one sole corner of the universe, and one brief period of the immensity of time You seek even now, by the immoral antagonistic dualism you establish between earth and heaven, to banish from men's minds all reverence for nature (which is a form of the divine thought), and you refuse, in the name of an individual salvation to be achieved through faith and prayer, all communion with

Life is production increase of that already gained. and you have for upwards of five centuries been struggling, with ever lessening power, merely to conserve

When a religion no longer either creates, determines or directs action, when it rouses no power of sacrifice, when it no longer harmonises and unites the different branches of human activity, when its vital conception ceases to inform new symbols, or new manifestations in art, science, or civil life-that religion is expiring. You may still, by help of the deceptions of your ministers and the pomp of your rites, gather a numerous concourse of apparently devoted followers around you, and you will continue to do so, so long as their sole choice lies between the records of a faith once grand and fruitful of good, and the arid negations of a brutalising materialism, but demand of these followers that they should die for you and for the faith you represent, and you will not find a martyr among them. You did not find one when we confronted your banner with our own in Rome, upon which was inscribed the Word of the future. God and the People, and proclaimed-through the unanimous vote of the very men who, the day before declared themselves believers in you-the abolition of your temporal power and the Republic.

Your Pope fled in disguise, and all of you vanished utterly, the constant intrigues with which you endeavoured, when at Gaeta, to raise up internal enemies amongst us, were fruitless. You were reduced to beg the aid of bayonets, the instruments of the tortuous policy and ambition of a vulgar pretender, whom you well knew to be as infamous as he was unbelieving in your doctrines Our men died-they still die for the sake of the glimpse vouchsafed them of that new faith which, ere it has enlightened their intellects, has fired and warmed their hearts-in dungeons, or upon the scaffold or the battle-field, with a smile of defiance upon their hps, but around you I see none but mercenaries greedy of rank or gold

Be not deceived faith is perishing around you Even as lingering sparks still issue from a dying fire, the expiring faith of the day finds its expression in the prayers muttered before your altars through the force of habit at stated brief moments, it evaporates at the church door, and no longer rules or guides men's daily life they give one hour to heaven and the day to earth -to its material interests and calculations, or to studies and ideas foreign to every religious conception

Science proceeds onward, regardless of your doctrine. heedless of your anathema and of your councils, destroying at every step another line of the Book you declare infallible Art wanders in the void, now retracing its steps towards the pagan ideal, now doubtfully pursuing religious aspirations other than yours, and now, as if in despair of finding any other God, reduced to worshipping itself, but always apart from the Christian synthesis. always irresponsive to the conception which inspired your architects and painters in ages past

The miquitous Governments of the day, to whom it is a necessity to maintain your authority in order to prop the tottering foundations of their own, deny it, none the less, in the practical exercise of their power "the law" for them "is atheist,"-the separation of the temporal from the spiritual power is their supreme rule of guidance. and the very king who implores your benediction in secret, affects before his subjects to despise it the day after.

The men of highest power, whether of intellect or eloquence, belonging to your creed, from Lamennais down to Père Hyacinthe, detach themselves from you one by one Not a single one of the vast strides made upon the path of progress in our age was either suggested or consecrated by your faith

Four millions of black slaves have been emancipated -in pledge of other emancipations-across the Atlantic. in the name of the immortal human soul within them. and they owe it to no crusade of yours, but to a war of an exclusively political character, fought by men whose sole idea was one of national limity

Like the great German family at the downfall of naganism, and as if as a warning of the approach of a similar epoch, the Slavonian family is in movement upon a zone extending from the North Sea to the Adriatic, and eager to proffer its word at the fraternal European banquet, while you-the sometime distributors of distant lands among the monarchs-appear scarcely conscious of the fact. They ask for aid in their work, not from you, but from us

Mute, and disinherited alike of inspiration and affection, having abdicated all power of intervention in the events that transform and improve God's earth, you, who were once the world's centre, are gradually being driven back to its extremest orbit, and are destined to find vourselves at last alone in the yord heyond. Motionless sphinxes in the vast desert, you mertly contemplate the shadow of the centuries as they pass Humanity, whom you should have guided, has gone otherwhere Faith is perishing among the peoples, because the dogma that inspired it no longer corresponds to the stage of education which they, in fulfilment of the providential plan, have reached

The Christian dogma is perishing. The arch of the Christian heaven is too narrow to embrace the earth, Beyond that heaven, across the fields of the infinite, we discern a vaster sky, illumined by the dawn of a new dogma, 1 and on the rising of its sun your own heaven will disappear. We are but the precursors of that dogma few as yet, but earnestly believing, fortified by the collective instincts of the peoples, and sufficiently numerous to convince you—had you sense to comprehend it—that when the tide of materialism shall recede, you will find yourselves confronted by a far other foe We worship not anarchy we worship Authorty, but not the dead corpse of an authorty, the mission of which was concluded in a now distant past, and which can therefore only perpetuate its power through tyranny and felsehood

The authority we revere is founded upon the free and deliberate acceptance and popular worship of the tuth conquered by our epoch, upon that conception of life which God reveals to mankind in time and measure through souls devoted to Him and to His Law.

Your dogma may be summed up in the two terms, FALL and Kindmentow, our own in the terms God and PROGRESS The intermediate term between the Fall and Redemption is, for you, the Incarnation, at a given moment, of the Son of God

The intermediate term for us, between God and His Law, is, the continuous and progressive incarnation of that law in Humanity, destined slowly and gradually to discover and to fulfil it throughout the immeasurable,

a mer scientific or historic fact, limited, it may be, to one epoch, one fraction, or one series of the acts of humanity, having neither root in the past, nor pledge of duration in the future. It represents a religious conception of the radically different from yours, a durine Law, a supreme formula of the eternal, omnipotent, creative force, universal as itself

The root of every religion is a definition of life and its mission. For you that definition of life is the doctrine of Original Sin, and of resurrection to God through faith in a Divine Being, who descended upon earth to sacrifice Himself in expiation of that sin

Our definition of life asserts the imperfection of the finite creature, and its gradual self-correction by virtue of a capacity of progression, given to all men, through works, through the sacrifice of the egotistic instincts for the sake of the common improvement, and through faith in a divine Ideal, which each is bound to incarnate in himself

God, the Father and Educator, the law prefixed by Him to life, the capacity, inborn in all men, to fulfil it, free will, the condition of merit, Progress upon the ascent leading to God, the result of right choice-these are the cardinal points of our faith

In the dogma of Original Sin, which is the keystone of your edifice (except the presentiment it contains of that human solidarity which you do not comprehend), we see nought but Evil profanely made the baptism of life the absolute impossibility of accounting for the inequality of evil tendency manifested among men. and an hereditary doom which denies alike human free will and responsibility

In the Redemption through the incarnation of the Son of God (except the symbol it contains, by you neglected, of that aspiration which impels the finite towards union with the infinite) we only see subtraction made of the divinely educating force, the substitution of an arbitrary fact for the majesty of a divine law, a solution of the continuity of the collective life of humanity, and the sanction of an unjust dualism between the generations anterior and posterior to the Cross

From this diversity in the foundations of faith, follows a series of consequences which affect both heaven and earth-the Dogma and the Moral Code

You believe in the divinity of Icsus I can well understand the origin of this belief in times when it alone was able to secure the doubtful victory of Christianity, when the idea of Progress was unknown, and consequently unknown the conception of the gradual manifestation of God through His Law You could not avoid attributing to the Announcer of truth a character which would compel mankind to obey His precents

We, who at the present day believe in the continuous revelation of God throughout the collective life of humanity, have no need of a sole immediate Revealer to teach us either to adore His power, or to feel His love.

The divine incarnation of both these attributes is perennial in the great facts which bear witness to the collectivity of life, in the great intellects, sanctified by viitue, who prophesy or interpret that universal life, and in the grand aspirations of individual conscience, which foretell or accept truth.

We venerate in Jesus the Founder of the epoch that emancipated individual man; the Apostle of the unity of the divine law, more largely understood than in times anterior to His own, the Prophet of the equality of souls we reverence in Him the Man who loved more than any other, whose life-an unexampled instance of harmony between thought and action-promulgated as the eternal basis of every future religion, the sacred dogma of Sacrifice, but we do not cancel the Womanborn in the God, we do not elevate Him to a height whereunto we may not hope to follow Him we love Him as the best of our human brothers, we do not worship and fear Him as the inexorable Judge, or intolerant Ruler of the future

You believe-thus depriving yourselves of every basis of intellectual certainty and criterion of truth-in miracles, in the supernatural, in the possible violation

We believe in the Unknown, in the Mysterious-to be one day solved-which now encompasses us on every side, in the secrets of an intuition inaccessible to analysis, in the truth of our strange presentment of an Ideal, which is the primitive fatherland of the soul. in an unforeseen power of action granted to man in certain rare moments of faith, love, and supreme concentration of all the faculties towards a determinate and virtuous arm-deserved therefore-and analogous to the power of revelation which the increased concentration of rays in the telescope communicates to the human eve : hut we believe all these things, the pre-ordained consequence of laws hitherto withheld from our knowledge

We do not believe in the miraculous, as you understand it, in the infringement of laws already known and accepted by arbitrary will, in facts in contradiction to the general design of the creation, which would, we consider, simply testify to a want of wisdom or of justice in

You appeal in support of your theory to an idea of divine Free Will We deny it We are free, because imperfect called to ascend, to deserve, and, therefore, to choose between good and evil, between sacrifice and egotism. Such free will as ours is unknown to God, the perfect Being, whose every act is necessarily identical with the True and Just, who cannot, without violation of our every conception of His nature, be supposed to break His own law

You believe in a God who has created and reposes We believe in continuity of creation, in a God the inexhaustible source of the Life diffused perennially throughout the infinite, of thought, which in Him is inevitably identical with action, of concentions, realised

You believe in a heaven extrinsic to the universe: in a determinate portion of creation, on ascending to which we shall forget the past, forget the ideas and affections which caused our hearts to beat on earth. We believe in One Heaven, in which we live, and move, and love, which embraces—as an ocean embraces the islands that stud its surface-the whole indefinite series of existences through which we pass. We believe in the continuaty of life, in a connecting link uniting all the various periods through which it is transformed and developed. in the eternity of all noble affections, maintained in constancy until the last day of our existence, in the influence of each of these life-periods upon the others; in the progressive sanctification of every germ of good gathered by the pilgrim soul in its journey upon earth and otherwhere

Von believe in a divine hierarchy of natures essentially distinct from our own and immutable. From the solemn presentiment enfolded in the symbol of the angel you have deduced no better conception than that of a celestial aristocracy-the basis of the conception of aristocracy on earth-and maccessible to man. We recognise in the angel the soul of the just man who has lived in faith and died in hone, and in the inspiring, or guardian angel, the soul of the creature most sacredly and constantly loving and beloved by us on earth, having earned the recompense of watching over and aiding us on earth The ladder 'twixt earth and heaven of Jacob's dream symbolises, for us, the ascending and descending series of man's transformations on the path of initiation in the divine Ideal, and the beneficent influence exercised over us by the beloved beings who have preceded us upon that path.

You believe in an Eden surrounding the cradle of mankind, and lost through the fault of our first parents , we believe in an Eden towards which God wills that humanity-traversing the path of error and sacrificeshall constantly advance. You believe that the soul can pass at one bound from its human existence to the highest beatitude, or to absolute, irrevocable perdition We believe the human period of our existence too distant from the highest ideal, too full of imperfections to allow that the virtue of which we are capable here below can suddenly deserve to reach the summit of the ascent leading to God. We believe in an indefinite series of reincarnations of the soul, from life to life, from world to world, each of which represents an advance from the anterior, and we reject the possibility of irrevocable perdition as a blasphemy against God, who cannot commit self-destruction in the person of the creature issued from himself, as a negation of the law prefixed to life, and as a violation of the idea of love which is identical with God. It may be that we shall retraverse the stage over which we have already passed, if we have not deserved to ascend beyond it, but we cannot, spiritually, either

You believe in the resurrection of the body, such as it was at the termination of our earthly existence, we believe in the transformation of the body (which is naught other than an instrument adapted to the work to be achieved) in conformity with the progress of the Ego, and with the mission destined to succeed the present

All things are, in your creed, definite, limited, immediate, bearing the stamp of a certain immobility. which recalls the characteristics of the materialist conception of life. In our creed all is life, movement, succession, and continuity slow, progressive divinisation of man.

You believe in grace, we believe in justice You, by believing in grace, believe-more or less explicitly, but mevitably-in predestination, which is but a transformation of the pagan and anstocratic dogma of the two natures of man Grace, according to you, is neither granted to all, nor to be achieved through works, it is arbitrarily bestowed by the Divine Will, and the elect are few We believe that God called us, by creating us, and the call of God can neither be impotent nor false Grace, as we understand it, is the tendency and faculty given to us all gradually to incarnate the Ideal. it is the law of progress which is His ineffaceable baptism upon our souls.

That law must be fulfilled Time and space are granted to us wherein to exercise our free will. We can-through our action and endeavour-hasten or delay the fulfilment of the law in time and space, multiply or diminish the trials, struggles, and sufferings of the individual, but not, as the dualism taught by your dogma would do, eternise evil, and render it victorious Good only is eternal God only is victorious

Meanwhile, that dualism which dominates your doctrine of grace, of predestination, of hell, of redemption half-way upon the historic development of humanity, and every portion of your Dogma inspires and limits your Moral Code, and renders it irremediably imperfect and mefficacious to guide and direct human life at the present day.

Your dogma is expiring Your moral code is therefore rendered sterile and expires with it. It is deprived of its origin and its sanction, of that faith in the duty and necessity of regulating human life by its precepts, whence it derived its power to govern men's individual instincts, passions, and free will You have but to look around you in order to perceive this

The moral code is eternal you say, and you point to the precepts of love towards God and man, of sacrifice, of duty, of preference given to the salvation of the soul over the desires and interests of a day

Yes, those precepts spoken by the lips of Jesus do live, and will live, they are as undying as our gratitude towards Him. His cross, as symbol of the sole enduring virtue-sacrifice of self for others-may still be planted, without any contradiction, upon the tomb of the believer in the new religion, but a moral code which is to have a fruitful, active influence upon mankind requires far more than this

The precept of love, which is inborn within the human soul, is the basis, more or less apparent, of all religions, but each religion gives a different value and larger interpretation to that general formula of Duty The moral problem, the solution of which progresses with the epoch, is the problem how we are to worship God, how we are to love man, how we are to work out the soul's salvation, and it is the mission of the religion of each epoch to give the force of a law, supreme over all and equally binding upon all, to the definition of the How, and to compel the fulfilment of the duty thus defined by linking it with heaven, tracing it back to the Divine conception of the creation Even if your moral code were sufficient for the intelligence and aspirations of the epoch it would still remain sterile, a mere inert, inefficacious dead letter, because this link is lost. Your heaven exists no longer, your conception of creation is proved faise. The telescope has destroyed it for ever in the fields of the infinite, geology has destroyed it on earlit; the recently recovered tradition of the past of humanity has destroyed it in the kinglion of the past of humanity has destroyed in the kinglion of intelligence, and the presentment within us of a new moral code, boly as it was before it had become adultanced by your corruption, intolerance, and cowardly compromise with the athesite powers of the world.

unequal to the obligations imposed upon us by God 1. The dualism of your dogma, transferred into your moral code, generated that antagonism between earth and heaven, matter and spirtl, body and soul, which, ino matter to what grade of the doctrine you belong, essentially narrowed your conception of the unity of life, and of its mission here and elsewhere, rendering it impossible that the great social questions of the day should be solved through help of your religion.

In the face of an empire believed to be omninotent. and founded upon the prestige of material force placed between a religion which sanctioned the dogma of the two human natures (freeman and slave) and a philosophy which consigned mankind to the dominion of fatality. in a world of which there existed no conception of the collective life of humanity, or of an innate faculty of progress in individual man-having to address himself to men either intoxicated with tyranny and lust, or crushed by poverty and the abject servility induced by despair of a better future-it was impossible for Jesus to conceive any other mission for the benefit of the brother men. He loved so well, than that of effecting their moral regeneration, or any other consolation for their wretchedness on earth than that of creating for them a country of free men and equals in heaven. It

themselves, in spite of, and against, the earth From the legend of the temptation, in which the earth is evidently the heritage of the evil spirit, down to the "render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's" of the three first Gospels , from the opposition between the law of God and the flesh, of Paul (Rom vu.). down to the "love not the world," of John (2 Ep 11 15).

the teachings of Iesus and the Apostles constantly insist upon our divorce from all terrestrial things, as a condition of moral improvement, of salvation. In their eves our earthly abode is overshadowed by the curse of sin and temptation, and our sole hope of salvation from this curse lies in our suicide of the man within us

As Tell, even in the midst of the tempest, spurned from him the bark that bore the oppressor, each of us is held bound to spurn from him the earth, to cast loose every tie that binds him to it, in order to raise himself on the wings of faith to heaven.

The result of these teachings is a moral code which may be thus summed up -Adoration of God, and faith in Christ, as the necessary intermediate to our salvation . renunciation of every natural desire, abdication of every aim of social transformation; indifference to every earthly good, resigned acceptance of every existing evil, either as a means of expiation, or of imitation of the sufferings of Jesus; war to the body and to the senses, submission to the powers that be, exclusive importance given to the work of internal purification, especially to the realisation within ourselves of faith in heavenly grace The holy nature of Jesus's own mind diffused a breath of love over the whole of his teachings, and generated a spirit of charity and disposition to good works in his hearers, but it was the love of men who, despairing of vanouishing the evil existing in the world. sought only to alleviate the more immediate sufferings of individuals Christian charity was rather a means of purifying one's own soul, than the sense of a common aim which it was God's will that man should realise here below It did not overpass the limits of benevolence, and led the believers in the new religion to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and heal the sick with whom they came in contact, but to no attempt to destroy the causes of human hunger and misery Even as the earth itself was despised, so were all the good things of the earth to be despised as a perennial source of temptation, and the gifts to the poor and to the Church testified to this belief Poverty itself was preached by the majority of Jesus's followers as a blessed mortification of the flesh, and regarded by all as an incontestable necessity Love of country, and that love which embraces the generations of the future. and is devoted even unto sacrifice for their sake; that love which will not tolerate the brand of inequality or slavery on the brow of a brother-man, was unknown to Christian morality. The true country, the real home of Christian free men and equals, was heaven, every man was bound to direct his course thither, and the greater his sufferings on earth, the stronger the hope he might entertain of his soul's future, and of celestial 10v The world was abandoned to Satan Religion taught man to renounce it, religion, which was alike his isolation and his refuge, it imposed no mission of earnest and resolute struggle, and of slowly progressive but certain victory Such was, such is, your Moral Code Solitary con-

consequences At a later period, when you were trumphant, when the necessity, which all religious undergo, of transforming society in their own image compelled you to mingle in social and political life, you frequently (with immense advantage to civilisation) obeyed that uncertain and instinctive sense of right and equality which lies at the root of your religion, but it was simply as a fact, not as a doctrine, and did not in any way alter the educational principle of your Moral Code, which was incarnated historically in the dualism of the temporal and the spiritual powers—the Papage and the empire. The greatest foryour Popes, Gregory VII.,

attempted to crush this dualism beneath the ownipotence of moral force, but he failed, and died in exile The greatest of your philosophers, Thomas Aguinas, attempted to destroy the antagonism between the soul and the body, through a definition of man borrowed from Aristotle, but it was too late, not even the decrees of your Council of Vienna, in support of his attempt, could transform a moral code which had been identified with the Christian Conception of Life for thirteen centuries Your religion was the religion of individual man did not-it could not, at its origin, contemplate collective humanity It aspired towards the ideal, the divine, and would, had it been possible, have sought to realise its ideal on earth. But the instrument failed it. short, imperfect life of the individual (beyond which this concention did not extend) is incapable of its realisation Your religion, as if to avenge its own impotence, cried anathema upon the terrestrial world. and referred the solution of the problem to the world of grace-to beaven

Herein lies the secret of all you have achieved, and of all you have failed to achieve

Christianity is the religion of individual man. The vast religious synthesis through which we are gradually advancing towards the realisation of the ideal, is resolved like an equation containing an indefinite number of unknown quantities Every religious epoch disengages one such unknown quantity, and classes one more term of the problem among the known quantities, never more to be disputed Two grand primary epochs-the gigantic Aryan religions of the East-concentrated their intelligence, inspiration, and labour upon the two terms

-God and Nature But in both these epochs, the ideal man (crushed by spiritualist or materialist pantheism) was absent. While Mosaism elaborated the idea of the divine unity, and preserved the sacred deposit for futurity by incamating it in a people, a third great epoch assumed (in Europe) the office of disengaging the human unknown-beginning with the individual-and adding

it to the number of known quantities As the human individual manifests life under two aspects, personal and relative—represented by the two terms, liberty and equality—so that epoch was divided into two long petiods

In the first period, polytheism affirmed the individual, and elaborated his enancipation within certain narrow limits, evolving—in the Greco-Roman world—the idea of liberty. During the first labour of elaboration, however, and in the information of rebellion against Oriental pantheism, the conception of the Divine unity was broken up into fragments, and all basis of durability was thus destroyed.

In the second period, your religion, having inherited from Moses its belief in the Divine unity, replaced the Detty at the apex of the pyramid, and fulfilled its mission with regard to the problem of the individual, by defining his relative life, proclaiming the equality of souls, and

Such was the historic mission of Christianity, nor was it possible that the epoch, when-as it invariably happens-it deduced its political and economic constitution from its religion, should advance beyond the limits of the doctrine of the individual, and the two terms (liberty and equality) by which that doctrine is represented When the Protestant sects-moved by the corruption of Catholicism-sought to recall the multitudes to initial Christianity, they were unable to discover any other criterion of truth than individual conscience The great political and social revolutions which, towards the close of the last century, attempted (knowingly or unknowingly) to realise the Christian principles in practical life, summed up their whole labour and endeavour in a declaration of the rights common to every individual, and prefixed as sole governing law of the development of the double life-moral and material -of mankind, the insufficient rule of liberty

God, God and Nature, God, Nature, and Manthree cantos of the gigantic religious Epopea which has the ideal for its subject and the generations for its poet

Wherefore do you pretend that God and the generations shall now be dumb? Wherefore should we bury m your sepulchre an inspiration inseparable from life itself, and silence the new canto insig to the lips of creation, which has for its theme—God, Nature, Man, and Humanity? Wherefore should not the new heaven, of which we already have dim prevision, be represented by a new eart? the new dogma, by a new Moral Code?

VI

The earth is of God, it cannot be accursed Life, like the God from whom it springs, is One and everlasting, it cannot be broken up into fragments, or divided into penods of a character radically opposed There is no antagonism between matter and spirit Matter gives forms to thought, symbols to the idea. means of communication between being and being The body, given by God as the earthly tenement of the individual, and the means of communication between His life and that of the external world, is not the seat of evil or temptation Evil and temptation, wherever they do exist, exist in the Ego the body is the instrument which translates either good or evil into action. according to our free choice. The dualism between the temporal and spiritual power is an immoral concention, without any basis in the nature of things. The moral law-once recognised and accepted-ought to be supreme, and the mission of the temporal power is its application to the civil and economic realities of life Wherever such is not the case, either the moral law isas yours is at the piesent day-the corpse or lying nhantom of law, or he whose duty it is to translate it into action is false to it and is immoral.

The earth is of God It is a step upon the infinite ascent that leads us to heaven our sojourn during one of our evistences, wherein we are bound to prepare ourselves for the next. It is neither a dwelling of expiation nor an arena of tempitation. The necessity of surficiation from sits committed, and the tempitations to evil which are conditions of our free will, east in ourselves, and will accompany us in every ulterior evolution of the life of the Ego. The earth is the sphere wherein we have an appointed mission to perform, with instruments of labour furnished by it; and we are bound to regard it with love and rewerence, as the seat of our possible sanctification. In the ascending sense of words, separate stages of the long pigiramage of the Ego, the earth also has its appointed place; it also is—within prescribed limits—the cradle of the ideal, an incarnation—in time and space—of the eternal world, a note in the immense concord which harmonises and embraces creation, an essential link of the chain which unites the universe with the throne of God.

Life is a mission human existence that portion of it which we have to accomplish here on eath To discover, comprehend, and intellectually to master that fragment of the drivine law which is accessible to human faculties, to translate it in action (as far as human powers allow), here, where God has placed us, is our aim, our duty. We are each and all of us bound to strive to incentate in humanity that portion of eternal truth which it is gianted to us to perceive; to convert into an earthly reality so much of the "kingdom of heaven"—the divine conception permeating life—as it is given to us to comprehend. Thus doing, we are slowly elaborating in man the angel, failing to do this we shall have to retrace our path.

J. "Seek not to isolate yourselves imprison not your soul in sterile contemplation, in solitary prayer, in pride of individual purification, in pretending to a grace which no faith not realised in works can enable you to deserve Be not deceived by the doctrine that salvation may be achieved in spite of, and in opposition to, the eath You can only achieve it through the earth. You can only save yourselves by saving others. God asks not, What have you done for your soul? but, What have you done for the brother souls I gave you? Think of Hate the sin, but never the sinner: he bears within him (though stifled now by egotism) germs of the same virtues that are in yourselves, and destined yet to be developed Love in him your brother of the future Punish not: protect the society in which you live, and educate the erring members of it Preach not labour not, in the name of rights which do but represent the individual, but in the name of duty, which represents the aim of all You have no rights, save as the consequence of duties fulfilled, they may all be summed up in the one right, that others should fulfil towards you the duty you fulfil towards them Say not the sovereignty is in us. they accomplished a mission "Be your priests and counsellors in all the doubts and agitations of conscience those whom long years of tried virtue, and study of things eternal, have proved worthy to be such Prophets and guides upon the weary pilgrimage of humanity are the men upon whose brow God has set the seal of genius sanctified by virtue, but forget not that the Divine element exists also in yourselves, never yield up the liberty of your immortal souls into the hands of your brother-man. Love, honour, and follow, but serve not. Respect in yourselves that human unity which is a reflex of the unity Divine The false philosophy of the day has, in the absence of a religious faith, broken up that unity, by parcelling it out into faculties of reason, sentiment, and sensation, and some have worshipped one and some another of these faculties, but remember that neither thought. aspiration, nor economic fact constitutes life they are but the instruments of life, equally necessary and equally sacred when united in action towards the realisation of its aim, the progressive incarnation of the ideal, and respect alike the inviolability of thought, the sanctity of aspiration, and the organised development of the material faculties, without which the development of the rest is impossible

"Let labour be the basis of civil society, and let the distribution of its fruits be according to works. Let him who will not labour possess naught

"Hold sacred the religious faith which unites the millions in a common part of love and action, but hold sacred also the heresy wherein, it may be, lies the germ of the faith of the future Represent the first in your rites and fraternal associations, but fail not to protect the second from all intolerance

"You owe to all men education founded upon your religious synthesis, but forget not that the supreme conception of that religion is progress, and let the last words of that education be these we have made known o you the moral law, in the name of which the brothers mongst whom you are called to live and labour are issociated, but remember that life is given to you in order that you may endeavour to improve the society n which you live, to purify and enlarge its faith, and o urge forward on the path of eternal truth the men vho surround you, and who will bless your work "

You may cast your dying anathema on this moral ode, but, humble individual as I am, I declare to you hat the time is not far off, when it will take the place of that which you, while daily violating it in your actions, proclaim eternal

All the greatest thinkers, from Prometheus to Socrates and Plato, and from them down to our own time, have prophesied the fall of one belief and the rising of another None had prevision, like Jesus, of the characteristics of the future faith One of those rare intuitions, which make of Him a type hitherto unique amongst men. inspired the words above quoted, linking His own faith to the faith to come. It seems as if the symbolic forms of religion, the transformatory work of time upon them. the sanctity of universal tradition, and the continuous revelation of the Spirit of God through humanity, were all foreseen by Him, on the eve of the sacrifice He had accepted, when the darkness of the future was illumined by the immense love He bore to His fellow-men You are no longer capable of love or sacrifice, and, therefore, those words have no meaning for you, unintelligible as the warning at the banquet of Belshazzar

So soon as that idea, comprehended by the intelligence, and incarnated in the hearts of mankind, has become an inalienable part of universal tradition, even as the mountain traveller on reaching one summit beholds another rising above him, so is a new idea or aim presented to the human mind, and a new conception of life, a faith, arises to consecrate that idea, and unite the powers and activity of mankind in the fulfilment of that aim. Having accomplished its mission, that religion disappears, leaving behind the portion of truth it contained, the unknown quantity disengaged by it from its symbol, a new immortal star in humanity's heaven As the discoveries of science have revealed, and will reveal, star upon star. until our knowledge of the celestial system, of which the milky way is zone, and the earth a part, be complete, so the religious faculties of humanity have added, and will add, faith to faith, until the entire truth we are capable of comprehending be complete. Columns of the temple which the generations are building to God, our religions succeed and are linked with one another, sacred and necessary each and all, but having each and all their determinate place and value, according to the portion of the temple they sustain You who seek to support God's temple on a single column seek the impossible Could mankind follow you in the insane attempt column and temple would fall together

The world is athirst of God, of progress, and of unity You substitute for God an idol, an infallible Pone You oppose to progress the impotent, barren negations of your canons You impede unity by accepting-on condition that a fraction of the State he preserved to you by force-the dualism between the temporal and spiritual power, represented by the Papacy and monarchy. The hideous idolatry will be answered by God, the destroyer of all idols, past, present, and to come Your wretched negations will be answered by humanity, which will look upon you, smile, and pass on The dualism you perpetuate will be answered by the people-the sole power destined to increase-who are hourly acquiring that consciousness of their own strength which alone is needful for their victory.

The epoch of individuality is exhausted The epoch of association has begun, and is destined-perhaps through the very Rome you desecrate and profane-to sweep away monaichy and the Papacy together I remember vaguely, while I write, a short poem of Byron's called "Darkness" Amid the ruins of a world expiring in icy cold, two beings alone are left They also are doomed to perish, but they persist in struggling against the approaching dissolution Groping amid the darkness, they reach the ashes of an expiring fire, and strive, with all the anguish of one who seeks to prolong existence, if only for a day, to revive it with their breath. When at last they succeed in raising a feeble flame they turn to gaze upon each other, to discover, with rage and terror, that they are enemies !

From the Council to God 324

but my thoughts, as I recall them, turn involuntarily to The last, doomed representatives of a world, from which all life is withdrawn, you, Papacy, and Monarchy, have sought to dominate humanity more surely by dividing it in twain Conscious of your incapacity of re-uniting it, and yet realous in your impotent ambition of each other, you have striven to found an impossible alliance between the powers you have disjoined, and from time to time have embraced each other upon the tomb of some once free and dreaded nation, but hating and despising each other in your hearts, and seeking to injure each other so soon as freed from any imminent danger. Now groping onwards, solitary and suspicious, amid the darkness, and vainly seeking to rekindle the fire irrevocably consumed. you bend your dying gaze upon each other in rage and fear.

Descend into the tomb you have dug for yourselves Had you loved, forefelt the future, and adored in time the Spirit of truth announced by Jesus in dving, you might have made of that tomb an altar It is now too late. The Angel of Death will inscribe upon that tomb the condemnation you have forgotten.

"And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him. neither in this world, neither in the world to come. --- Matt. xii 32

NOTE ON THE REVOLUTION OF 1831 THE Revolution of Central Italy in 1831 was a sequel of the July Revolution in France The Pausian Carbonari had been industriously connecting the threads of revolution in North and Central Italy Early in February it broke out in Modena and Bologna, and within a fortnight all but a fraction of the Papal States and the Duchies of Modena and Parma, the mass in fact of Central Italy, with the exception of Tuscany, were in full revolt The temporal power was abolished, a National Assembly was decreed, the Pope was on the point of flight. The Bolognese Government had relied on French promises to protect them against Austrian aggression One of the formulas of the July Revolution had been, that no nation should be allowed to interfere in the domestic concerns of another. The French ministers had protested that France would never allow the principle of non-intervention to be violated, and had promised to fight if Austria sent troops into the revolted provinces At the same time they were sending Metternich private assurances to the contrary, and soon afterwards. throwing off the mask, they declared that "the blood of Frenchmen belongs to France alone " Free from French opposition, the Austrians easily overran Parma and Modena When the Modenese forces retired into Romagna, the Provisional Government at Bologna, in pedantic observance of the non-intervention formula, still hoping against light that Finance would misst on its observance by Austra, regarded them as beligerents entering a neutral territory, and disarmed them "None of our people? they said, "shall take part in our neighbours' quarrels" Their fears gave the lie to their high sounding phrases of Italian unity and nationality, and took the life out of the stuggle. A feeble retreat to Ancona, varied by some spinted fighting on the part of the volunteers at Rimmi, was followed by complete surrender, and, though the Revolution broke out again at the end of the year, it was easily suppressed by the Papal troops

The revolution has been, perhaps, over-hardly criticised by Mazzini and others The irresolution and incompetency of its leaders, their pedantic belief in phrases, their incapacity to guide, admit of no defence. The lawyers and professors who directed it had small experience of public life They thought they could sway men by maxims, and despised the spiritual forces that are the life-blood of a revolution. And so the people welcomed the revolution, but after the first few days had no enthusiasm for it They chose their deputies for the Assembly, but were never made to feel their own responsibility and place in the new order Men who under good leadership would have fought and perhaps conquered found themselves isolated and paralysed, and resigned with hardly a struggle to the old hated rule And yet it was in advance of the revolutions of Naples and Piedmont ten years before. In some respects it went ahead of popular feeling, and the abolition of the temporal power scandalised the masses outside the great cities lt accentuated, though with a somewhat uncertain voice, the nationalist bearings of the democratic movement. Italian liberalism too had broadened since 1821 It had spread from the army to the lawyers and tradesmen and artisans, Democracy no longer paraded in military full-dress it had become bourgeous and unostentatious, and if it lacked capacity and enthusiasm, it had gained in a certain plain solidity. There was a disinterestedness and probity about it that testified to the new spirit. Social reform had been absent from the programmes of the earlier evolutionists; it it had now, force Mazzini, come to the front, and the first days of freedom had been signalised by a long list of piractical improvements in law and taxation and social rights.
